WASHINGTON.

Further Debate in the Senate on Private War Claims.

Speech of Gen. Butler on the Financial Situation.

The Proposed Protectorates for Hayti and St. Domingo.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, TUESDAY, Jan. 12.

Gen. BUTLER made his speech to-day on the "New Gospel of Finance," as Senator SUMNER calls it. He got it in by a characteristic parliamentary manoeuvre. He first obtained unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference, which was granted, and he introduced his illimitable greenback bill, which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. He then moved to reconsider that reference, which motion being debatable, he proceeded to give his reasons why it should not be referred, which reasons consisted of a carefully prepared and printed speech on the general subject of the finances, occupying one hour and thirty-five minutes in its delivery. It was listened to with earnest attention by nearly the whole House, and is pronounced by those who differ with him on a very able and ingenious presentation of his peculiar views.

PROTECTORATES FOR HAYTI AND ST. DOMINGO.

Gen. BANKS to-day reported, or, more properly, introduced from the Foreign Relations Committee the protectorate resolution for Hayti and St. Domingo, noticed in the dispatches several days ago. It was distinctly understood that the Committee did not agree to it, and it therefore came before the House as a naked proposition, without anything more than individual support. Gen. BANKS, however, proceeded with an able speech in support of the idea, and engaged the attention of the whole House for nearly an hour. He admitted that the action proposed was without precedent, but this was an age of new things and new ideas, and sooner or later this action would be taken by some Power. Revolution could not go on in these countries eternally without sapping the foundations of civil government the world over. At present there is much hostility to the proposition, but it will probably gather some strength by discussion. A vote may be reached to-morrow.

THE TARIFF BILL.

An indication of the probable fate of the Tariff bill occurred in the House to-day. Mr. WASHBURNE reported the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, and asked that it be made the special order for to-morrow. Mr. MORRHEAD moved that the Tariff bill be made the special order in its place. On a vote by tellers, Mr. WASHBURNE's motion was carried by yeas 75, nays 38. This is not a test vote, of course, but it is a straw. The Ways and Means Committee were engaged to-day in considering amendments to the bill, but did not reach any conclusions of importance.

THE ST. THOMAS TREATY.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs had an informal consideration of the St. Thomas treaty to-day, but nothing indicative of future action was developed.

THE TENURE-OF-OFFICE REPEAL.

It is a serious error to assume, as some papers do, that all the Republicans who voted against the repeal of the Tenure-of-Office act, did so from a lack of confidence in Gen. GRANT. Such an assumption does them great injustice, and Gen. GRANT himself will be among the last to attribute such a motive to the votes of men like GARFIELD, DELANO, SHELLABARGER, POMEROY, LAFLIN, AMES, JENCKES, PIKE and others. They do not belong to the faction commonly called extreme Radical, and Gen. GRANT has no more faithful supporters than they. Most of the extreme men voted for the repeal. The negative vote was larger than it would have been had the bill come from the Committee in the regular way. Coming up as it did, many Republicans looked upon an affirmative vote as making too much haste to conciliate the coming power, and this, coupled with the objection to putting such important measures through under the whip of the previous question, caused some of the ablest and most practical men in the House to vote in the negative. Probably no one thing did more to secure the passage of the bill yesterday than the positive statement by the highly respected Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. JAMES F. WILSON, that the Committee had agreed to such a bill, but that owing to the short session they would be unable to report it in regular order under the call of their Committee. The assumption that Mr. SUMNER will head the opposition to the repeal in the Senate is also unwarranted. He has made no public statement of his views on the subject, but in private conversation he has indicated that he will vote for the repeal.

FINANCIAL SCHEMES.

The Senate Finance Committee were in session to-day, but no action was taken on any of the numerous bills before them. There was a general discussion on the order of business, and the Committee will endeavor to agree on some scheme and present it to the Senate at as early a day as possible.

RECONSTRUCTION OF GEORGIA AND VIRGINIA.

The Judiciary Committee will meet to-morrow, when the reconstruction question of Georgia and Virginia will be taken up. There appears to be a strong feeling in the Senate in favor of the objects of the Virginia delegation and the proposed plan for the admission of that State to representation in Congress.

POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

The Reconstruction Committee to-day agreed that they would report no more bills for the relief of political disabilities until the claims of the States of Georgia and Mississippi were decided. Gen. GILLEM will go before the Committee to-morrow.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Gen. DODGE, Chief Engineer of the Union Pacific Railroad, to-day received a dispatch announcing that the track had reached the 1,000 mile post, and was within twenty miles of Salt Lake Valley. This Company expect to build 120 miles of the remaining distance. A decision by the President as to where the two roads shall meet is expected at an early day. If each build on the route now laid out, parallel lines for some distance are probable. A connection must be forced by the Government to prevent this.

PARTIES AND RECEPTIONS.

The gay season is fairly opened in Washington. Fashionable circles are noisy (twice) in consequence of a grand hop delicate given by Hon. D. McCALLUM and lady, of New-York. Six hundred invitations were out, and the attendance is very large, including many representatives of the most distinguished society at the Capital. The music, refreshments and all the arrangements are of a most superior character. Speaker COLFAX resumes his usual weekly levées on Friday evening. Mrs. COLFAX will preside, assisted by Mrs. MATTHEWS and daughter. The President, assisted by his daughters, Mrs. PARSONS and Mrs. STROWS, will give his first evening reception on Tuesday evening next, the 19th instant.

Dispatches by the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

THE INAUGURATION.

The following is the concurrent resolution introduced into the House of Representatives by Mr. DEVENS, Chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and passed:

Resolved, The Senate concurring, that so much of the Capitol as hereunder specified be granted to the Committee of Congress, to which to conduct the inaugural proceedings other than official of President and Vice-President on the 4th of March next, to wit: The rotunda, the old Hall of Representatives, the Senate corridors and the Senate public reception room, the passage leading thence to the rotunda and old hall, and so much of the basement not used by Committees as may be required. The Senate Chamber, the hall of Representatives, Committee-rooms, and all other parts of the building to be closed to the public, except the east entrance to the Senate. The occupation is not to take place until after the official inauguration, and the building is to remain all the time in charge of and under the control of the Sergeants-at-arms of the two Houses of Congress.

Several meetings of persons interested in the proper observance of the ceremonies (other than officially usually connected with the inauguration of President and Vice-President of the United States) have been held in this city. The Committee convening the movement consists of the following gentlemen: Senator E. D. Morgan, Chairman of the Union Republican Congressional Committee; Hon. R. C. Schenck, Chairman of the Union Republican Executive Committee; Gen. J. B. Hawley, President of the late Chicago Convention; Gov. Wm. Claflin, President of the National Republican Committee; Wm. E. Chandler, Secretary of the same; Gen. E. A. Paraum, Chairman of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Committee; Gen. N. P. Chipman, Secretary of the same; Mayor Bowen, of Washington; A. S. Solomons and W. S. Huntington, representing the citizens of Washington; Wm. A. Cook, President of the Republican Association of the District of Columbia; Judge J. M. Edmonds, President of the National Union League; Lieut.-Gen. Sherman and Major-Gen. Hunter, representing the Army of the United States; Vice-Admiral Porter and Rear-Admiral Reiley, representing the Navy; G. T. Brown, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate; H. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives; Edward Clark, Architect of the Capitol; Ben Perley Poore, President of the Washington Correspondents' Club; Hon. John W. Forney, representing the Press; Mayor Welch, of Georgetown, and E. D. Cooke, representing the citizens of Georgetown. The following compose the Executive Committee: R. C. Schenck, E. D. Morgan, S. J. Bowen, N. P. Chipman, Ben Perley Poore, T. L. Tullock, A. S. Solomons, W. S. Huntington and R. Clark. The foregoing constitute a general committee for the management of the inauguration procession and reception, and the unofficial ceremonies appropriate to the occasion. It is expected that the use of the Rotunda of the Capitol, the old Hall of Representatives, the Senate and House corridors and Senate Reception Room, and so much of the basement as may be required by the caterer, will be permitted to be used, a concurrent resolution to that effect having passed in the House to-day. The tickets of admission have been fixed at $10 for one gentleman and two ladies, with $2 for each additional lady. Complimentary tickets to the festivities are to be issued only to the President and Vice-President elect and their families, and they will be the guests of the occasion. The use of wines or liquors are prohibited, and the entertainment will be conducted on temperance principles. The surplus funds which may be realized will be donated to the National Lincoln Monument Association. Brevet Major-Gen. ALEXANDER S. WEBB has been appointed Grand Marshal. He is a grandson of Col. SAMUEL B. WEBB, who was Grand Marshal at the first inauguration of President WASHINGTON.

THE TREATIES WITH CHINA.

In compliance with the requirements of the act of June 22, 1860, to carry into effect the provisions of the treaties with China and certain other Oriental nations, the President transmitted to Congress a copy of eight rules agreed upon between the Chinese Imperial Government and the Minister of the United States, and those of other foreign Powers accredited to that Government, for conducting the proceedings of the joint tribunal in cases of confiscation and fines for breaches of Revenue laws of that Empire. The rules provide for an adjudication of such cases in first instance by a Board consisting of the American Consul and the Chinese Commissioners of Customs and the Chinese Superintendent of Customs. An appeal in certain cases may be taken to the higher authorities of both nations at Pekin, and the proceedings, character of proof, &c., are regulated with great minuteness of detail. An accompanying letter from the Secretary of State to J. Ross Browne, American Minister to China, communicates the President's assent to the rules, and commends the diligence and ability with which Mr. WILLIAMS, our Chargé de Affaire, ad interim, has practiced in securing the adoption of a code which promises to be so highly beneficial to the commerce in the East. The Secretary of State urges Congress to approve of these rules.

RECEPTION BY THE PRESIDENT.

President JOHNSON and his daughters will hold a reception on Friday evening next, from 8 to 11 o'clock.

FORTIETH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.—WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition in the form of a series of resolutions adopted at a mass meeting in Mason, Ga., on the 1st of January, setting forth the deplorable condition of things in that State, and asking the passage of SUMNER's bill as a remedy.

RAILROAD SUBSIDIES.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented a Memorial, signed by FRANKLIN HAGEN, GEORGE SUTTON, HENRY G. GARDNER and other capitalists, setting forth that the proposed subsidies to the Northern Pacific Railroad and to the Eastern Division of the Union Pacific Railroad will amount besides land grants to $125,000,000, and offering to construct either or both the roads for a subsidy of $15,000 per mile in addition to the land grants, thus saving to the Treasury $75,000,000, and offering to give bonds indorsed by capitalists representing $100,000,000. Mr. FESSENDEN said he was opposed to the granting of any subsidy to railroad companies, but presented this memorial because one of the signers was a constituent of his.

COMMISSIONER WELLS' REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported favorably the resolution to print 20,000 copies of Commissioner WELLS' report for the use of the Senate. Adopted.

THE REMAINS OF MINISTER GOODWELL.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the resolution to provide for bringing home the remains of our late Minister GOODWELL, and it was adopted.

TRANSFERRING GRANTS AND CHARTERS.

Mr. SUMNER introduced a bill to prevent the circumvention of the grants or privileges derived from the United States.

It provides that it shall not be lawful, without the express consent of Congress first obtained, to assign or transfer to any alien, person or persons, any grant, charter, grant of privilege derived from the United States, and that any such transfer is declared void. Referred with any foreign nation.

Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FESSENDEN introduced a bill to continue the office of Solicitor and Naval Judge-Advocate-General.

Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RICE introduced a bill to aid in the construction of the Arkansas and Pacific Railroad. Referred.

The bill provides for the incorporation of the Arkansas and Pacific Railroad Company, and maintain a railroad from Little Rock, Ark., to the eastern terminus of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, on the Mississippi River, and that the grants the bill makes to grant twenty alternate sections of public lands per mile on each side of the road, and also an loan of Government bonds, one per cent currency bonds to the amount of $16,000 per mile, to be secured by a second mortgage on the property of the Company.

Mr. RICE introduced a bill to provide for an additional judge of the United States Circuit Court in Arkansas. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. POMEROY introduced a bill to grant a portion of the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth to aid in the construction of a railroad bridge across the Mississippi at that place. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REBEL CLAIMS.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING the Senate took up and passed the bill relating to the time for filing indictments in the United States Courts in the lately rebel States.

It provides that such indictments may be found in any State for two years after the restoration of the State to a representation in Congress, but does not apply to treason or other political offenses.

INDIAN CHILDREN.

Mr. ROSS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with an amendment the bill authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to appoint guardians or trustees for minor Indian children who may be entitled to pensions or bounties under existing laws.

CAPTIVE CHILDREN.

Mr. CONNESS, from the same Committee, reported the House bill for the relief of Hiram and Elizabeth Lipscomb, and for the withholding of money from the tribes of Indians holding American captives, with amendments which provide that the income from the sum of $5,000 for each of said children be reserved from moneys due the Kiowa Indians, shall be used for their education and support, and the principal be paid them on attaining their majority.

PRIVATE WAR CLAIMS.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of SUE MURRAY, of Decatur, Ala.

Mr. DAVIS being entitled to the floor signed at length in favor of the bill and against the doctrine that the State of Alabama was ever the enemy's territory, or that loyal citizens of the United States were ever public enemies or could be made so by the action of their disloyal neighbors. He maintained that everything done by the rebel Governments in the Southern States by way of taking those States out of the Union was null and void, and the rebellion within its territory could no more take Alabama out of the Union than it could take Michigan, Territory of Michigan by the English in the war of 1812. Rebels could make their enemy's country. But the true ground upon which in his judgment the claim of Miss MURRAY rested was the provision of the Constitution, that private property shall not be taken for public purposes without compensation, a provision that could not be circumvented away by any pretendite of national or belligerent rights. The Government established by the Constitution is sui generis, and its powers and duties are not to be comprehended or interpreted upon the principles which apply to the other forms of government.

Mr. DAVIS said that he viewed the case on the assumption that Miss MURRAY had always been a loyal citizen of the United States; that the property in question belonged to her, and was taken by the Government deliberately for a public use, and upon this assumption, he held that Miss MURRAY was as much entitled to compensation for her property, as if she, and it, had been located in New-York or Massachusetts.

Mr. DOOLITTLE regarded the taking of Miss MURRAY's property as in the nature of a forced loan, and thought therefore that the questions involved could be best determined upon principles applicable to a loan forced by the Government from one of its peaceful citizens. Our country had fortunately had little experience of forced loans, but they had always been resorted to in South American Republics, and from the knowledge of them, which he had acquired by a residence in one of the Republics, he confessed that he felt a strong antipathy to the pretenses by which such loans were generally sought to be justified. The only tenable ground of opposition to allowing claims like this, in his opinion, was that the Government would require that a Government after a war should indemnify every person who had been faithful to it, and had suffered special loss, but every one knew this to be impossible, because it would impose unbearable burdens on the people, and therefore every Government was the obligee of its citizens by refusing to pay for the loss inflicted by the enemy, and in other ways. But the property of Miss MURRAY was not lost by the action of the enemy; it was taken deliberately by the Government for a public purpose, and he felt he could vote to recompense her for it without assenting to any principle which would trench on the right of the Government to consent and measurable amount of obligation. If it should be decided that a military commander in an insurrectionary district can take the private property of a loyal citizen for the public use without incurring from the Government any obligation to pay for it, on the ground that in the event of a future rebellion it would be safer to be a rebel than to be loyal. It would amount to a license to military commanders to do what they pleased with the property of private individuals in an insurrectionary district. Two classes of citizens were, he thought, entitled to special credit for their conduct during war; the loyalists of the South, and the citizens of the North who sustained the Government of the United States, notwithstanding the errors and the gross outrages committed by the party in power, and, belonging to the latter class himself, he appealed to the Senate to do justice to a lady belonging to the former.

Mr. SUMNER said the discussion of this claim had made clear two things—the magnitude of the interests involved, and the simplicity of the principles by which the question should be determined. That question, assuming the loyalty of Miss MURRAY, was whether the nation was bound to indemnify loyal citizens domiciled in a rebel State. In this case three things were to be noticed: first, that the petitioner was domiciled in a rebel State; second, that the property taken was situated within a rebel State; and, third, that by reason of these facts it was the property of war. These three facts presented the case. A case easy to decide, however painful it might be to make the decision. The rule of international law applicable to it was, the property of persons domiciled in an enemy's country is liable to seizure and capture, subject to and only which gives the same value to loyal character of the owners. This rule might seem harsh; but it should be remembered that it was a rule of war, which from the beginning to the end was terrible harshness. The concession of complete belligerency in law to the rebellion removed all grounds for doubt as to the applicability of international and national law to our late civil war. The nation had against the rebellion two sources of power—two sources of rights and powers: First, the rights and powers of sovereignty, and second, those of war, the former determined by the Constitution, the latter by the laws of war. The rebellion could be treated by the nation either as a traitor or as a belligerent. When pursuing him as a traitor, he was entitled to all the forms and delays provided for in the Constitution; but when pursuing him as a belligerent, a new rule and not the Constitution governed. The provisions of the Constitution were silent; and international law prevailed in the south as the rebellion had grown into a war; and the fact that it was a civil war made no difference in that respect. The claimant in the case having been domiciled in a rebel State, and therefore a public enemy, and her property having been situated there and taken under the necessities of war, she was clearly not entitled to compensation.

Mr. SUMNER cited numerous authorities to show the compensation allowed to American loyalists by Great Britain for their losses during the war of the Revolution, and the compensation granted by Congress in a few cases to American citizens for losses, where it was given from the gratitude of freedom and generosity; it was not a matter of right. In conclusion he expressed the opinion that many cases of greater hardship than this one might be presented for the consideration of Congress.

Mr. WILSON said he had no hope to throw any light upon the question, and he would not make an attempt. He felt there was no authority that could not be controverted. He had got of any or all the writers on international law, that a Government was under no obligation to pay its loyal citizens for the property taken for public use, then he applied from their decision to the judgment and conscience of the nation, and to the great considerations of the public policy. He warned the Government, and especially his own party, that they had no friends to spare at the South, and if this were put forth as the rule by which the nation was to be governed in dealing with its Southern friends, they would soon be even fewer than they are now. The well-being of the people of the South, white and black, depended upon the wisdom of Congress in the plan of reconstruction, and that, in his judgment, depended in a large measure upon the policy of the Government in regard to the claims of loyal Southerners like Miss MURRAY.

Mr. MORRILL said he had listened with great interest to the discussion of the legal principles involved in the case of Miss MURRAY. He had become satisfied that Congress must take a much broader view of the question than the technical legal view, and, in order to determine it right, should look rather to the peculiar condition of our country than to the opinions of PUFFENDORF, GROTIUS or VATTEL, whose works were written in other countries and under different circumstances. So far as the claim of Miss MURRAY was concerned, he was by no means satisfied that she was entitled to compensation, and he would vote to recommit the bill. Rest upon the general question of compensation to loyal citizens of the South, he wished to say a few words. Wherever in Indiana, or Ohio, or Pennsylvania, or any Northern State, a military camp had been formed, the owner of the property on which it was formed had been paid; and the proposition that a loyal citizen of the South, whose property was taken and used in the same way, ought not to be paid because he did live at the South, where it was more difficult and dangerous to be loyal than at the North, was, according to every man's sense of justice and humanity, to be considered into a monument. The rule should be that whenever a loyal man in the North would be paid for his property which was deliberately taken by the Government, a loyal man in the South whose property was appropriated in the same way should be paid for it, and whenever a loyal man in the North would be paid for his property destroyed in the course of a march or a battle, so a loyal man in the South should be paid for his property destroyed in the same way. By adopting a more technical rule some money might undoubtedly be saved; but in the end it would prove to be penny wise pound foolish economy.

The President then announced the appointment of Messrs. ANSON and RICE as additional members of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

At 4 o'clock the senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill to authorize the issue of a national currency, to secure its stability and elasticity, lessen the interest on the public debt, and reduce the rate of interest, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, after the 15th day of June next, to issue, on the faith and credit of the United States, $300,000,000, and that further sum of $50,000,000 to carry into effect the provisions of this act, in certificates of value of the Treasury of the United States, not bearing interest, and of such denominations as may be convenient, but not less than one dollar each, which shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, duties, imposts, debts and demands of every kind due to the United States, and for all claims and demands against the United States of every kind whatsoever, except where the law creating such claim or demand shall provide that the same shall be paid in coin, and shall be lawful money and legal tender in payment of all public and private debts, except as aforesaid, within the United States, and shall be receivable in payment for all loans made to the United States, and for all claims and demands against the United States of every kind whatsoever, except that they shall bear only on their face the denomination or value for which they are issued, together with appropriate devices, mottoes and coat of arms, and such signatures, checks and numbers, or other references as may be best to prevent over issue or forgery, and such other provisions as shall be prescribed by the provisions of the law under which they are issued.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

He moved to reconsider the motion, and thereupon made the following speech in support of the bill:

MR. BUTLER'S SPEECH.

The currency of a highly commercial, expanding, industrious, and productive and free people, by which their values are measured and exchanged, should be uniform, sound, cheap, stable, and elastic. Uniformity is that quality which gives the same value in every part thereof to the money of a country. This quality our present currency possesses in a sufficient degree of perfection. Soundness may be defined as certainty that the currency is so secured that it can never fall of exchangeability for equal intrinsic values. No American permits himself to doubt but that our legal tender and national bank notes, secured by the pledge of public faith, guaranteed by all the resources and power of the country, are to be made good to the extent of value printed on their face. Our present currency, therefore, possesses the quality of soundness for all purposes of internal business and trade. As to cheapness, all financial writers agree that a paper currency is the cheapest of all possible mediums of circulation, whether as regards the cost of its supply or of its wear and tear, or because of being non-producing capital while circulating from hand to hand. If gold and silver were used in its stead, or locked up in banks for its redemption, they would be so much idle and dead capital doing duty as currency only, and the nation so using it would suffer the loss of interest on so much wasted capital. It is apparent that paper being but the sign or token of value yields no loss of interest upon itself or capital which it represents. While, therefore, in these particulars, our present currency is cheap enough, yet there is another sense in which that term is sometimes used in relation to money, but more properly to capital, which our present currency wholly fails to satisfy, and which it will behove Congress to supply if it would. It is the economical notion of which money or capital is now furnished to the consumer or user. Stability of currency is, perhaps, the most important of all its attributes. It may be well enough defined as a quality of currency when used as a standard and measure of value which renders it incomparably as all times as compared with itself. A measure of value, to be of any value, more than should the measures of length, quantity, or weight. It should be at all times one and the same. When all the property of a people is once adjusted to such a measure of value, it is of comparatively little moment what that measure may be.

To illustrate: We have two measures of weight, the pound troy and the pound avoirdupois. We find no special inconvenience in their use, as the classes of objects substituted to their measure have remained unchanged for many years, and are brought and used with regard to the difference between them, which also is invariable. So as to length. It is entirely unimportant whether we had adopted at first the imperial yard of Britain or the metre of France as a measure of length, provided we maintain it unchanged. In the sense in which we have defined stability, our currency is perfect in its quality of stability.

Elasticity is a quality of a currency which shall be so adjusted as to meet the varying demands of business, and be neither redundant nor deficient in volume. Elasticity by no means synonymous with fluctuation, the latter being the increase or diminution of value of the currency at one time as compared with another; the former is the change of volume only as compared with itself. To give an illustration from a sensible object: water is the most wearable, but the least elastic of substances. A currency to meet this requirement of elasticity should have such capability of volume as to adapt itself to the highest needs of the internal business and commerce of the country, and at the same time such contractibility as to adapt itself to the state of greatest depression without in either case affecting its soundness or stability or value. This quality of the currency is the element of its highest usefulness and safety as a circulating medium. In nothing is our present currency more defective. It has a limit fixed by law, beyond which it cannot go, however great the exigencies of the business of the country may be; it contains within itself no power of contraction when not needed. Its volume must then remain still the same, seeking investment and profit in speculation and adventure forced by the solicitness of bankers and capitalists.

Again, not being capable of expansion the supply of loans and accommodations capitalist can consistently with their own interest and safety, as a rule, only how much currency he must lock up at the time when it is most needed to bring about financial crisis and distress, and thus involve in ruin the unsuspecting and honest merchant and farmer, who is made the victim of unlawful combinations which he can neither foresee nor control. A deplorable example of this sort is a practical fact has taken place within a few weeks under our eyes, by which the managers of an insolvent railroad, in connection with certain banks, who should have been regulators instead of operators of the currency, conspired to sequester some thirty millions, and thus to bring about a stringency in the money market, and a consequent depression in the public securities of some five per cent. In a single day, out of which the conspirators might realize large profits. This process of robbing the community may now be repeated at pleasure. A system of currency which permits its guardians, the banks which issue it, to thus sport with the public credit and oppress the merchant, depress the public funds, and unsettle the business of the country, is clearly defective, as is the duty of Congress to provide the remedy for that defect. We see, therefore, that our currency is uniform, cheap and sound enough, but that it lacks stability from fluctuation and elasticity to accommodate itself to the changes in the demand of business. Our financial system has another great and overshadowing defect, controlling the Prosperity and development of the industry of the country. When called due and as a representation of capital, our money is worth only forty-five cents on the dollar. These hundred and fifty-six millions of it, not now taking into account the fractional currency issued by the Government, was at once funded into gold-bearing bonds at six per cent., payable by State and municipal authorities, and as is lately claimed, but without warrant of law—payable in gold. The Government itself, that issued it, and the Treasury, must pay an equivalent of ten or eleven per cent. for its use. The remainder—say $300,000,000—is issued to the banks by the Government, which pays some $18,000,000 to them for the privilege of furnishing and indorsing it, cannot be obtained by the consumer from the banks short of one to two per cent. interest, premium, exchange and commissions, that is when issues it must pay. Out of the great cities, and away from the sea-board, the average rate of interest is at least twelve per cent. In many sections of the Southern States, on whose productions of the great staples, cotton and tobacco, as our chief exports to meet the balance of trade which is against us, we must depend, it money cannot be obtained, they pay interest upon any security, and, if got at all, the average rates are twenty-four per cent. In view of this, it will be seen the rate of interest becomes a matter of national importance as affecting our commercial relations with the other countries of the world. Cotton can be produced in Africa and India by the aid of capital costing not more than four or, at most, five per cent. per annum, while the capital used in producing our cotton costs twenty-four per cent.; thus making a direct discrimination against our producer of twenty per cent., which of itself is to the foreigner a quite sufficient profit on the business. The high rate of interest, which raises the value of all our productions, and the fixed limit to our currency, which is taken advantage of to produce financial panics and distress, imperatively demands the most prompt and efficient remedy. It can neither be denied nor delayed with safety or justice to our people as individuals, or to the country as a nation. Impressed with a sense of the necessity for some amendment of our financial system to effect these objects, still we must remember that every great or sudden change in the finances of the country has ever been, as it ever must be, the fruitful parent of panic, depression, and paralysis of its industry and enterprise. This consideration ought to circumscribe our action within somewhat narrow limits.

The only comprehensive remedy for the infelicities of our currency and financial condition that has been proposed, as far as I know, is that we should resume specie payments at once or at some period more or less remote, or, in other words, that we should return to the currency existing before the war, with the substitution only of the national for the State banks, i. e., that the Government should conduct the affairs of the Treasury on a basis of specie, and that the banks should have in their vaults one-fourth of the amount of their circulation in gold, thus to be in condition to profess to pay specie for their bills when demanded, which should, therefore, be equal to gold. This, if it can be done, of course would bring every United States bond at once to par in gold, as the gold holders, if the return to specie payment by the Government did not presuppose the substitution of gold for them. No one doubts that however soon or late such a change is effected it must cause the greatest depreciation of values in every species of property except debts held against the Government and individuals, for no human foresight could be approximated, say thirty per cent.; all other property would be depreciated the same amount as compared with the present rate of valuation. Such an unsettling of values the world has never seen nor any nation endured. It would be equivalent to confiscation by legislative act of one-third of the value of all the property in the country, excepting only that held by the creditor class. The sole alleviation yet suggested is that such confiscation might be extended over a considerable period of time, say two years and a half, so that we might meanwhile be preparing ourselves for it; in other words, the Government ought to deprive the large majority of the middling and laboring men of the country, for twelve per cent. half yearly of their values until one-third of them are absorbed for the benefit of the small minority, who are owners of capital loaned at interest. I will not insult the intelligence of the House by any argument upon the feasibility or practicability of such a measure. The better way to see things as they are is to call attention to one or two of the methods by which it is proposed to accomplish so gigantic an undertaking. One says, "The way to resume specie payments is to resume." Suppose the physician should say to the sick man, "The way not to be sick is to be well," it might not be a very profound or practical "How." Or, to put it in the form of a question, "How shall we get well?" So, a few years ago, one may remember that the way proposed for the Union armies to get to Richmond was "On to Richmond," and I trust I may not be considered malicious in calling to mind that our armies found some difficulties in carrying out that suggestion. Experience has taught us that it was not to be hoped those who blindly advocated it would never again dogmatize upon any subject the difficulties of which they neither appreciated or understood.

Another proposition, coming from a source we much respect, is some other of the branches of political science, that "if we HAVE law that specie payments shall be resumed on the 1st day of January, but we are not told how the law is to be enforced if passed. It was joocosely said many years ago that while an act of Parliament was omnipotent, yet it could not make one's uncle his aunt. I fancy there would be an equally insuperable difficulty in compelling by law the Government to pay specie, and the banks to redeem their bills in specie, when there are but $100,000,000 capable of being used for that purpose. Another learned, able and intelligent gentleman, for whom we all entertain the highest regard, in a speech of great power, supports a bill embodying a plan for the relief of our financial difficulties, which, if it could be made to work possible. Subjected to the halo thrown around it by his learned learning, it proposes that the Government and banks shall return to specie payments by hoarding gold enough with which to do it. Granted; but how is the gold to be got? By borrowing, simply. For although the Government may hoard the gold it receives for its duties on imports, yet that gold is in fact obtained by its merchants by borrowing it with Government notes at 36 per cent. discount. Whatever debts of gold to carry out this scheme cannot be obtained by this process, is to be borrowed on the Government notes for thirty years, sold at such rate of discount as foreign bankers may choose to impose. Now, specie payments, if they can be maintained, it will be admitted, will make all our public debt, with the high rates of interest, equal to par, if not at a premium in gold. The fault in the plan seems to be that we are not told how many greenbacks we must sell at 36 per cent. loss on their face, and how many bonds we must negotiate at a like rate of discount on thirty years, to place ourselves in condition to pay both greenbacks and the bonds, which we thus sell at par. Differential calculus might work out the problem, but plain arithmetic is entirely inadequate to the task. Besides, as upon the best authorities there only about fifteen hundred millions of specie currency in circulation in all the nations, where our bonds have been or will be taken as an investment, or, indeed, in the civilized world, if we should succeed in locking up $300,000,000 of that, at 36 per cent. of the whole currency of the world, should we not make what in technical phrase is known as a "corner" on the rest of mankind, in comparison with which the late performance in that line of the Erie Railroad and New-York bankers would sink into insignificance?

Again, suppose by this measure and novel process of borrowing we were to return to a "state of currency"—or use the phrase of those who insist that our "legal tenders are depreciated, fallen paper," because not paid on demand, i. e., return to specie payments, to the state of currency before the war, we would be in the condition we found ourselves in. It will be remembered that notwithstanding the fact that the Government received all the duties and paid all its expenditures in gold and silver only, amounting to from fifty to seventy millions yearly received and paid out

THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

The Reciprocity Treaty—Trade and Commerce, and the Revenue Derived Therefrom Since its Termination—Changes in the Canadian Tariff—Comparison of the American and Canadian Channels of Commerce.

The following is the report of Hon. ISRAEL HATCH, of New-York, upon the commercial relations of the United States with the Dominion of Canada, which was sent to the House of Representatives yesterday by the Secretary of the Treasury:

Hon. Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: The resolution of inquiry passed by the House of Representatives, July 6, 1866, and received by me, called for

First—A statement of the trade and commerce of the United States with the British North American Provinces and the revenue derived therefrom since the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty, and all changes in Canadian tariffs since that date.

Second—A statement of the comparative importance of American and Canadian channels of commerce, or transportation of property from the West to the seaboard.

On the 6th of May, 1867, my report in answer to these inquiries was submitted to the House of Representatives. At that time it was impossible to reach conclusions on several important points with a satisfactory degree of certainty. Scarcely had one fiscal year of the United States then passed since the treaty had ceased. A large amount of the articles on hand free and under the treaty was hurried forward from the Provinces as the time for its termination approached, to avoid the duties levied afterward. A corresponding diminution in the importations immediately subsequent naturally ensued. Hence a comparison of the trade during the last year of the treaty and that next afterward would have yielded no conclusive inferences. With the termination of the treaty, our commercial intercourse with the Provinces is again open for investigation and legislation or diplomatic action. Renewed attention has been drawn to it by the efforts of the Canadian authorities to remove the dissatisfaction of their people and promote the prosperity and consolidation of the New Dominion by reversing the course of trade under the treaty, thus giving its natural commercial connections and market to each province.

I now beg leave to submit a further report, embodying more recent information, (the result of the examination of two fiscal years,) in answer to the resolution of inquiry by the House of Representatives, and in pursuance of your instructions to me, dated March 27, 1866.

TRADE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA BEFORE THE TREATY.

The principle of freedom in our commercial exchanges with the North American British Provinces has at all times received the approbation of the leading statesmen of this nation, without distinction of party. It has become universally popular, and is decidedly in harmony with the national progress and enlarged spirit of the age. The territory of the Provinces is extended on a boundary indented with our own across the continent. Climate, soil and labor, the main elements of value in certain productions, are alike in both countries. These similitudes no doubt suggested the idea of reciprocal trade and commerce. The legislation and diplomacy of the countries finally gave it a practical though partial application in the adoption of the so-called Reciprocity Treaty. The principle of the treaty is, self evident, that the interchange of the products of each country free of duty. It was a formal movement in favor of virtual if not literal reciprocity, presenting to the world the example of two contiguous nations abandoning suspicion of injury from competition, and cultivating their resources on the best principles professed in modern civilization. The omissions in the treaty and its limited character led to its termination.

A brief statement of our commerce with the British Provinces and the revenue derived from it before the adoption of the treaty and during its decade is necessary to complete a proper history of the connection, the progress made by it and other commercial relations by its adoption and termination.

EFFECTS OF THE TREATY ON THE REVENUE OF THE UNITED STATES.

The treaty led to a large diminution in our revenue upon the Northern frontier. In 1856, the last year not affected by the treaty, the revenue upon articles included in the free list during subsequent years and imported from the Provinces or Canada, alone amounted to more than $1,245,403; and from all the British Provinces now included in the Dominion was $1,626,457. Assuming this as a basis of calculation in the ordinary mode of computing an increase of revenue for the five succeeding years, the revenues would have been $9,257,596 in the aggregate or $1,851,517 annually. On further examination it would be found that the revenues would have increased in the same ratio during the remaining years of the treaty.

Official Canadian reports show that in 1859 the amount of duties collected by Canada on imports, the first year after and unaffected by the termination of the treaty:

The main features of the trade of Canada with the United States and Great Britain, through a series of years, are correctly expressed in the above Canadian tables, which are not always accurate in details. The changes they exhibit from year to year will be found to exist in the fluctuations in trade produced by the laws of supply and demand.

An examination of the above Canadian returns shows that the commerce between the two countries has not been materially disturbed by the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty, although the United States have received a large addition to their revenue from the duties paid into our treasury on Canadian productions. It discloses the additional fact that the Canadians now, as in times past, sell to us and buy of Great Britain.

The contrast between $78,000, the amount of revenue annually received by the United States from Canadian imports during the operation of the treaty, and the large amount received since its termination, will occur to every one. It will also be remembered that the duties exhibited in the revenue tables already given are in gold. Computed in our currency they exceed $7,000,000 annually.

It is a significant and important consideration that during the whole existence of the treaty, a period of ten years, the United States collected only $750,000, while in the two fiscal years elapsed since its termination, instead of $750,000 we have collected about $15,000,000 in our currency. While our revenue has been thus increased, there has been no loss of trade.

The comparative magnitude of the flour and grain trade of New-York and Montreal, each the commercial center of its country, is shown by the following tables, compiled by HERMAN H. BAXTER, a gentleman who has rendered great service to the public by diffusing much valuable statistical information as to our inland commerce.

The essential and unchangeable characteristics of this trade are beyond the influences of temporary legislation on either side, and must be governed by those leading facts as to geography, climate and configuration of the Continent, which were more particularly set forth in a previous report already submitted to Congress.

The views then expressed have since been confirmed by the efforts of the Canadians to negotiate articles of commerce in a southward direction with Cuba, the West Indies, Mexico, Brazil, as well as other countries in South America, and to extend their trade with India and China. The distance to Cuba from Montreal by way of the St. Lawrence is at least three times as great as through the United States.

THE RIVAL CARRYING SYSTEMS.

To understand the influence of our respective geographical positions upon the commercial intercourse between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, it should be known that Port Colborne, on Lake Erie, and in the Province now called Ontario, is the entrance to the Welland Canal, and thence through Lake Ontario to the St. Lawrence canals. Buffalo, in the United States, and opposite Port Colborne, is the entrance to the Erie Canal, leading through our own territory, and, of the Hudson River, to our seaboard. All Western commerce occupies precisely the same status to these important points, whence diverge the two lines of water communication frequently regarded as the great rival routes of the trade of the Northwest. The proposed Niagara Ship Canal is on the American side, and parallel to the Welland Canal, and it main and if any commercial utility, must form the American link in the St. Lawrence canals through Canada.

The following is a statement of the relative distances, via the St. Lawrence canals and the Erie Canal, to New-York and Boston, the two chief Northern ports of the United States, the saving of distance in sending to New-York being an equal saving to all the more southern Atlantic ports:

	Miles.
Distance from Port Colborne to Montreal	500
Distance from Montreal through River and Gulf of St. Lawrence to track of commerce in the Atlantic	1,000
Distance from Port Colborne, via St. Lawrence canals, to Boston	2,600
Distance from Port Colborne, via St. Lawrence canals, to New-York	2,000
Distance from Buffalo, via Erie Canal and Hudson River, to our seaboard at New-York	800

During the six months when the St. Lawrence is open it is seldom safe, owing to strong currents, immense masses of ice, and fogs almost perpetual, the latter being caused by the meeting of the tropical waters with those brought down from the Polar Seas.

These geographical facts must determine, through all time, the supremacy of our markets and our carrying systems for the inland commerce of North America. Adverse legislation by our foreign neighbors may for a time deflect portions of our inland and foreign commerce from the natural channels of business and across to and from our Atlantic cities, but only at the loss of those who have the temerity to try the experiment.

CANADIAN TARIFFS, THEIR INFLUENCE ON UNITED STATES RAILROADS AND SHIPPING.

A statement of the changes in the Canadian tariff since July 6, 1866, required by the resolutions of the House of Representatives, will be found in the Appendix hereto. It will be seen that Canada, with a view to exportations and the demands of the mari-time Provinces, now admits wheat and flour free of duty. She has no crop so cheap and profitable for various manufacturing and other purposes as corn bought from us. It is a domestic necessity for her to purchase it, as she cannot produce it so cheaply as the corn buy it, and any duty levied by her upon wheat and corn, our two main articles of agriculture, must be paid by her people. Owing to the geological formation and position of the most populous and rapidly increasing portion of Canada, she will always be impelled to carry her coal from distant ports, entirely from the United States, her own dominions possessing absolutely none which can be imported as it.

A characteristic feature of the Canadian tariff is, that although the usual rate of duty levied on textile fabrics and other manufactures is fifteen per cent, and materials used in manufacturing are carefully exempted from taxation. Many articles already in use are thus admitted free, and others are placed on the list for that purpose. This course is dictated by the fullest extent of reference to shipbuilding, all articles used either in building or furnishing a ship being imported free of duty.

In similar policy exists as to railroad iron in all its forms, as locomotives and engine fixtures, and everything used in running railways.

To set great an transit city the facilities for shipbuilding carried out, that such a vessel as would cost about $100 a ton in the seaports of the United States, can be made for little more than half that sum in Canada.

The main features of the trade of Canada with the United States and Great Britain, through a series of years, are correctly expressed in the above Canadian tables, which are not always accurate in details. The changes they exhibit from year to year will be found to exist in the fluctuations in trade produced by the laws of supply and demand.

The essential and unchangeable characteristics of this trade are beyond the influences of temporary legislation on either side, and must be governed by those leading facts as to geography, climate and configuration of the Continent, which were more particularly set forth in a previous report already submitted to Congress.

The views then expressed have since been confirmed by the efforts of the Canadians to negotiate articles of commerce in a southward direction with Cuba, the West Indies, Mexico, Brazil, as well as other countries in South America, and to extend their trade with India and China. The distance to Cuba from Montreal by way of the St. Lawrence is at least three times as great as through the United States.

THE RIVAL CARRYING SYSTEMS.

To understand the influence of our respective geographical positions upon the commercial intercourse between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, it should be known that Port Colborne, on Lake Erie, and in the Province now called Ontario, is the entrance to the Welland Canal, and thence through Lake Ontario to the St. Lawrence canals. Buffalo, in the United States, and opposite Port Colborne, is the entrance to the Erie Canal, leading through our own territory, and, of the Hudson River, to our seaboard. All Western commerce occupies precisely the same status to these important points, whence diverge the two lines of water communication frequently regarded as the great rival routes of the trade of the Northwest. The proposed Niagara Ship Canal is on the American side, and parallel to the Welland Canal, and it main and if any commercial utility, must form the American link in the St. Lawrence canals through Canada.

The following is a statement of the relative distances, via the St. Lawrence canals and the Erie Canal, to New-York and Boston, the two chief Northern ports of the United States, the saving of distance in sending to New-York being an equal saving to all the more southern Atlantic ports:

	Miles.
Distance from Port Colborne to Montreal	500
Distance from Montreal through River and Gulf of St. Lawrence to track of commerce in the Atlantic	1,000
Distance from Port Colborne, via St. Lawrence canals, to Boston	2,600
Distance from Port Colborne, via St. Lawrence canals, to New-York	2,000
Distance from Buffalo, via Erie Canal and Hudson River, to our seaboard at New-York	800

During the six months when the St. Lawrence is open it is seldom safe, owing to strong currents, immense masses of ice, and fogs almost perpetual, the latter being caused by the meeting of the tropical waters with those brought down from the Polar Seas.

These geographical facts must determine, through all time, the supremacy of our markets and our carrying systems for the inland commerce of North America. Adverse legislation by our foreign neighbors may for a time deflect portions of our inland and foreign commerce from the natural channels of business and across to and from our Atlantic cities, but only at the loss of those who have the temerity to try the experiment.

CANADIAN TARIFFS, THEIR INFLUENCE ON UNITED STATES RAILROADS AND SHIPPING.

A statement of the changes in the Canadian tariff since July 6, 1866, required by the resolutions of the House of Representatives, will be found in the Appendix hereto. It will be seen that Canada, with a view to exportations and the demands of the maritime Provinces, now admits wheat and flour free of duty. She has no crop so cheap and profitable for various manufacturing and other purposes as corn bought from us. It is a domestic necessity for her to purchase it, as she cannot produce it so cheaply as the corn buy it, and any duty levied by her upon wheat and corn, our two main articles of agriculture, must be paid by her people. Owing to the geological formation and position of the most populous and rapidly increasing portion of Canada, she will always be impelled to carry her coal from distant ports, entirely from the United States, her own dominions possessing absolutely none which can be imported as it.

A characteristic feature of the Canadian tariff is, that although the usual rate of duty levied on textile fabrics and other manufactures is fifteen per cent, and materials used in manufacturing are carefully exempted from taxation. Many articles already in use are thus admitted free, and others are placed on the list for that purpose. This course is dictated by the fullest extent of reference to shipbuilding, all articles used either in building or furnishing a ship being imported free of duty.

A similar policy exists as to railroad iron in all its forms, as locomotives and engine fixtures, and everything used in running railways.

To set great an transit city the facilities for shipbuilding carried out, that such a vessel as would cost about $100 a ton in the seaports of the United States, can be made for little more than half that sum in Canada.

the ports of the Dominion, [illegible] in the currency of the United States.

The influence of this great advantage in favor of the Canadian railroad and foreign industry over that of our own country, both in competition for inland commerce on the lakes and rivers, and for travel carried on between the two countries on the ocean and with all nations beyond the seas, deserves great consideration, and the value in the future, in the way to provincial lines of railroads, also composing with our own, are scarcely less worthy of consideration.

The coasting trade of the British Provinces has never been conceded to the vessels of the United States. Foreign ships might go from one colony to another, but even this limited privilege is taken away by the confederation of the British North American Provinces. The Imperial act (16 and 17 Victoria, chapter 107, section 103,) is as follows:

"No goods or passengers shall be carried from one part of the British possessions in Asia, Africa, or America to any other part of the same possessions, answer in British ships."

Some years ago, in my report to Congress, referring to the successive and successful efforts of Canada to direct and control our commerce, the origin of this evil and injury to our industrial interests were pointed out. This evil has now grown into vast proportions, and is aggravated by the burden of our own legislation. It is becoming as disastrous to our foreign commerce as the armed ships of Great Britain, under rebel flags, were to our merchant marine during the late rebellion. Heretofore the shipowners of England and other commercial nations bought our vessels, which were seen on every sea and sailed under the flag of every nation. Now our lake marine and our railways have to compete with British Canadian carrying systems connected with a bounty. Our American shipbuilders admit Canadian vessels to registry, and the nominal ownership will be nominal. Their admission will be equivalent to a repeal of the Navigation laws, permitting foreign vessels to coast or carry goods from one port in the United States to another, as Canadian railways are allowed to transport from one inland port in the United States to another under a very liberal authority. It would then be said everywhere on our inland shores, as it is now said in Maine, that our ship-yards are idle, and grass is growing upon ways formerly worn the busiest tread of our workmen.

Already estimated by tonnage, the American vessels employed on the coasts have been reduced more than one-half between the years 1861 and 1867. Few, perhaps, adequately appreciate the value of our inland shipping. The coasting trade should be thrown open to British Canadian rivers, the inland shipping, the last remaining object of honorable pride to our navigators, would soon be driven from our inland seas, through the methods which have already reduced our ocean going vessels to less than one-half of their former numbers, and continue to diminish them.

Only by adopting the principle of exempting from duty or allowing a drawback upon all articles used in the construction of ships, can our former naval prosperity be restored. The same principles should also be extended to all our means of inland transit. By this course transportation of our great staple products would be cheapened for our exports be enabled better to compete in foreign markets, thus adding materially in turning the actual balance of trade in our favor.

ESTIMATE OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

As an explanation of the partial character of the treaty in not providing free navigation for our exports of the products of labor, it is often urged that the admission to the St. Lawrence and its canals compensated for the deficiency. If, with the advantages conferred upon our territory by nature, we cannot on a footing of just equality maintain the superiority of our transit system we ought to succumb. But impartial examination will soon convince that while the navigation of Lake Michigan granted to the Canadians by the treaty has been of much benefit to their shipping, which, by its cheapness, drives our own heavily taxed vessels out of the field, those have been greatly mistaken who imagined the St. Lawrence should prove a great highway from the West to the ocean.

COMPARISON WITH THE AMERICAN ROUTE.

As the navigation of the St. Lawrence was one of the supposed equivalents granted to us by the treaty, its real value becomes an important subject of investigation. It is certain, from the fact that Canada has any equivalent to give us for the advantages of our markets. Hence a comparison between that route and the connecting line between the Lakes and the ocean through our own country, is an essential portion of the answer to the inquiries submitted to me.

NATIONAL CANAL POLICY OF NEW-YORK.

Nor can consideration of the terms on which the use of the great American canal is enjoyed by the public be properly omitted, as that work is the chief competitor with the Canadian line, and we depend upon it for the maintenance of commercial supremacy in competition with Canada.

No other work of equal magnitude is known to us except the canal of Languedoc, by which, two centuries ago, LOUIS XIV., known in history as the "Grand Monarque," one most magnificent sovereign who ever occupied a throne, united the Mediterranean Sea with the Atlantic Ocean. The policy adopted by the enlightened statesmen who projected both these great works was alike. That of the State of New-York was so far to improve the geographical advantages of our position as to pass through our territory the then undeveloped commerce of the West and gradually to improve those facilities to such a degree as would be necessary to meet the requirements of the growth.

When she entered the Union, the State of New-York relinquished that part of her revenue which was derived from duties or taxes on foreign commerce, from the same spirit of true union, the national character of the canal was fully recognized from the beginning, and the State, declining to tax inland commerce, never used the tolls levied upon transit except to repay the cost of making the canals and of maintaining them—thus granting facilities to the transit of Western productions, at a time when the Southern states monopolized the inland trade, and practically recognizing the right of free navigation through her territory as a right of nature, which could not justly be withheld from the States of the interior.

The leaders of public opinion in that State, without distinction of political party, now adhere to the views thus early adopted. They seek by the development of mutual and material interests to strengthen the bond of union between the States.

Although the value of the navigation of the St. Lawrence has arisen from the traditionary estimates placed upon it when no other line of communication by water connected the great lakes with the Ocean.

The Hudson penetrated far toward the inland seas, and, situated the site of the commercial metropolis of the Union. But, beyond the navigable portion of that river, transit was difficult, and its cost so great as to be prohibitory.

In this condition of affairs the minds of the early settlers in the "Far West" naturally turned to the aid afforded by the magnificent rivers fed from the Great Lakes. If at that time the banks of the Lower St. Lawrence had been occupied by people animated by the same spirit of commercial enterprise as those and if the State of New-York had not then numbered among her citizens men of a comprehensive sagacity never surpassed, and combined with statesmanlike intrepidity and perseverance no less remarkable, the St. Lawrence might have become the great thoroughfare from the Northwest to the Old World; our national trade would for a time have gravitated northward far beyond the boundaries of the New England States; Montreal would have taken precedence of New-York; the whole commercial condition of the continent might have been temporarily changed, and the trade and manufactures and shipping of Great Britain would have been fostered and promoted to the same extent as the progress of our own would have been impeded.

At the time when they were needed, and worthy of the occasion opportunely arose among us. They appreciated the momentous importance of having the commercial metropolis of the continent within our own domain, saw the significance of the great valley through the interior of the State, understood the geographical nature of the continent, and the Eastern destiny did not point in vain at the only portal in the Alleghany Mountains, through which the waters of the lakes and their commerce are now practically connected to the mouth of the Hudson, with immense profit to the nation in every department of its industry.

Having originally taken upon herself whatever there might have been or risk in making, at her own unaided cost, a channel of cheap communication by water between the citizens of the Eastern and Western States, and between those of the West and the great highway of the world, the State of New-York, from partially recovered, to-day continued to be the free registrator of the cost of carriage between East and West, protecting no small proportion of the people of the Union against those exorbitant charges which might have been levied if the canal, with its natural monopoly of position, had fallen into the hands of speculating individuals or companies. It is computed that during the six months of navigation the canal alone carries as large a tonnage of freight as the five united trunk railroads from West to East during the whole year, at a saving to the public, being a saving of $11,000,000 annually to the people of the United States.

NATIONAL CHARACTER OF THE CANAL AND ITS VALUE.

The truly national character of the work is shown by the fact that the commerce passed over it and belonging to the people of the Western States, is only one-fifth of the aggregate, the remainder coming from the Western and Central States of Canada. The State of New-York does not furnish as large an amount of tonnage for the canal as is supplied by either Michigan, Illinois or Wisconsin singly.

No less conclusive is the testimony of half a century as to its unequivocal success, present value and the certainty of the continued increase of its trade.

The magnitude of the present annual productions of the States bordering on the lakes is not entirely unknown to the public; but few know how fertile is the soil and genial the climate of the vast area to the north and west of Lake Superior, soon to become settled and increase that you unexpected commerce of the lakes, which will pass through our own territory, enrich our merchants, employ our own people and add its diminishing our national burdens, if we are true to our own just interests and are faithful stewards of the public trust committed to our charge.

Already the average annual income of the canal, after deducting all expenses, is $3,000,000, carefully applied to the extinctment of the debt incurred by the construction. At the present rate of income, not computing its prospective increase, the debt will be wholly discharged in eight years. Subject to the

* Mr. HUNT, Chief of the Tonnage Division of the Treasury Department, estimates that the inland commerce of the United States is about seven times as great as our foreign commerce, and that the trade of foreign countries, (other than the British Possessions of North America,) in American vessels, and upon three times, can meet in the foreign commerce of the United States in both American and foreign vessels.

In one year that during the five years ending June 30, 1868, fifty-three per cent of the aggregate tonnage cleared or entered in the United States from foreign ports was in American vessels.

It has been seen (this in the rivalry between the channels of our [illegible] Erie Canal or Hudson River, the trade of our own country is completely in our hands, without competitor, affording room to large proportions of the Canadian channel, [illegible] the most means of commercial [illegible] in the world. Yet it is said that, with certain enlargements of our canals, the St. Lawrence will bear away the palm of victory, and British Canadian capitalists are urged to invest in the doubtful experiment.

A sum small in comparison with the cost of the Erie Canal expended in judicious improvements upon it, would so [illegible] permit the passage of boats of greater size, would reduce by one-half or fifty per cent. the present cost of transportation on it. A similar saving has been actually effected by similar means already applied, and competent engineers and statisticians bear testimony to the repetition of equal results from further improvement.

PROPOSED IMPROVEMENT OF THE CANAL AND ITS NATIONAL RESULT.

In a previous report the situation of Congress was called to said securing the realization of the proposal of the State of New-York (now embodied in a law) to adapt the Erie and Oswego Canals of that State to the military use of the National Government. To attain this object only a small sum is necessary compared with that required to overcome the natural obstacle of Niagara Falls. The desired result could be attained in one-third the time and at one-third the cost necessary for the completion of any practical work that could carry the lines of trade around the Falls. Nor would the enlargement of the New-York canals to the size proposed be only an experiment, costly in expenditure of time and money.

Impressed with these considerations, and the fact that applications are now entertained by Congress for the grant of large national aid to open new commercial channels and improve old ones from the West to the seaboard, it is respectfully submitted as a measure of sound political economy, regarding the national wealth and the interests of the people, that, if it has any, and it may be necessary for the judicious improvement of the Erie Canal to its maximum capacity for transportation, so as to enable it to carry expeditiously and at the lowest practicable cost, such freight as may be brought to it, shall be granted by the General Government of the United States, provided the State of New-York shall at the same time pledge its faith by a simple law, embodying in substance the traditionary policy expressed by CLINTON, MORRIS and FULTON, that, after the cost of the canal has been paid, no tax, toll or impost shall be levied upon the passage of boats through the said canal other than one-half of their former numbers, and continue to diminish them.

Only by adopting the principle of exempting from duty or allowing a drawback upon all articles used in the construction of ships, can our former naval prosperity be restored. The same principles should also be extended to all our means of inland transit. By this course transportation of our great staple products would be cheapened for our exports be enabled better to compete in foreign markets, thus adding materially in turning the actual balance of trade in our favor.

SUPERIOR COURT—GENERAL TERM—Jan. 12.

Before Judges Monell, Sutherland and Pelletreau.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH SEPARATION.

The Madison-avenue Baptist Church vs. The Baptist Church in Oliver-street calling itself the Madison-avenue Baptist Church.—This cause, involving title to the Madison-avenue Church property, and which has been frequently published during the progress of the litigation, was yesterday up for argument in the General Term of this Court on questions of law involving the validity of the order of Court under which the transfer of title was made by plaintiffs to defendants, and which conveyance is sought to be annulled.

The case was elaborately argued on both sides, and the Court took the papers and reserved decision.

Evarts, Choate, Stanley and Langdell, for plaintiffs; Wm. E. Martin for defendants.

CONTRACT—EXTENT OF PERFORMANCE.

The New-Haven and Northampton Company vs. Edward A. Quintard and Another.—This cause arose on a failure of contract to deliver a quantity of coal which had been contracted for with the defendants, against whom judgment was rendered in the Court below for $2,927 31. The case comes up on exceptions to the Judge's charge, and involves the question as to what constitutes the distinction between a readiness to perform, a readiness to perform, and a tender of performance, it being claimed that willingness and readiness without a formal tender of performance do not fulfill the requirements of the law in such cases. Decision reserved.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM—Jan. 12.

Before Judge Barbour.

STEALS UNDER TAX SALE.

Mary E. Townshend vs. Charles Gould, et al.—This was an action to clear a title to a piece of property lying in the vicinity of Eleventh-avenue and One Hundred and Fourteenth-street, and is brought under the statute providing that parties occupying and being in undisturbed possession of real property for a period of three years can call upon any party setting up a conflicting claim to show title thereto.

The defendant, who claims under a tax sale, sought to prove title by the introduction of assessor's books, the Comptroller's certificate and other documents, which were rejected for informalities of proof.

The plaintiff, for the purpose of proof, that the premises had been occupied to the extent of building a fence around it and placing a sub-tenant in charge.

The Court said it would be a question for consideration whether occupancy to this extent conformed to that contemplated by the statute.

Decision reserved.

John D. Townshend for plaintiff; H. Woodruff for defendant.

COMMON PLEAS—GENERAL TERM—Jan. 12.

Before Judges Daly, Brady and Sanwell.

LIABILITY OF COMMON CARRIERS FOR BAGGAGE.

The New-Jersey Steamboat Company, Appellants, vs. John J. Hackin, Respondent.—The respondent's assignor took passage on the appellant's vessel, and going to his state-room, left therein his valise, containing the articles lost, and locked the door. On his return in a few minutes afterward, the valise and contents could not be found. A verdict was rendered for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals. It was shown by defendant on the trial of the cause that in his valise there was a quantity of clothing and other articles more than necessary for daily use, and that a notice was posted at different points on the vessel directing that baggage be delivered in charge of the Company's servant, and claimed that a failure so to deliver absolved the Company from responsibility therefor. It was not shown that this notice was brought to the attention of the assignor of the plaintiff. The question was whether such notice, as given, was sufficient to take the case out of the operation of the general rule applicable in common carriers. It was claimed also, on behalf of the appellants, that to sustain the ground taken by the decision below, was to extend the liability of steamboat companies far beyond that of railroad companies or hotel keepers. Decision reserved.

William P. Prentice for appellants; J. J. Mackin for respondent.

LAWYER'S SERVICES—NEW TRIAL.

Hiram Myers, Appellant, vs. Amos K. Hadley, Respondent.—Appeal on an appeal from an order confirming the referee's report in favor of the respondent for professional services as a lawyer. After argument on both sides, an order by consent was made, directing a new trial before the referee.

R. T. Chatfield for appellant; A. K. Hadley for respondent.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Judge Recorder E. Robinson.

The proceedings yesterday at the Court of Sessions were brief.

Edward Haswell was indicted for the larceny of a coat from the house of Mr. Stout, No. 849 Lexington-avenue. He pleaded guilty. Judgment was postponed on motion of counsel.

John Reilly was charged with burglary on three several indictments. He was spoken of as a well-known house breaker, and was sent to the State Prison for six years.

The other burglary cases were those of William Corley, Owen McGilligan and Richard McManus. Corley pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to the State Prison for two years and a half. The District-Attorney then urged that as the two other prisoners were mere children, they probably were the tools of Corley. He hoped the Judge would show them mercy, as a sojourn in the Penitentiary would, doubtless, ruin them for life. The prisoners pleaded guilty of petit larceny, and the Judge, after stating that he agreed with the remarks of the District-Attorney, gave the young delinquents some earnest advice and suspended judgment upon them.

Michael Sullivan, indicted for grand larceny, pleaded guilty to petit larceny only. Four robes had been found upon the prisoner, which he was charged with stealing. The District-Attorney accepted the minor plea, saying that there was a doubt as to the propriety of sending the prisoner to grand larceny, inasmuch as the property had not been found in his possession quite long after the goods had been lost. He also urged that the previous record of the prisoner had been very good. Judgment was therefore suspended upon the case.

A trial of the remaining cases was postponed on motion of counsel for the prisoners.

MONETARY AFFAIRS.

Sales at the Stock Exchange—Jan. 12, 1869.

[illegible]

The revolution last week in the Direction of the Cleveland and Pittsburg Road, by means of purchased proxies to vote at the annual election, appears to have been quickly followed by sundry daring and reckless acts of outrage upon the interests of the actual proprietary and of the property, which are declared in the following protest of the minority of the new Board. We learn that this protest will be, if it has not already been, made effective by summary legal proceedings at Cleveland, which will not only arrest the rascally measures in contemplation, but probably set aside the annual election as conceived in fraud, and consummated by the use of proxies purporting to represent Stock which the Brokers and others who gave them either had no interest in at the time, or which had been parted with before the election. The document which we here publish certainly develops a specimen of railway scandal, second only to the recent stupendous frauds in the Erie Company, to which the front figure in the present case was a party in common with FISK, Jr., and JAY GOULD.

To the Stockholders Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad Company:

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad Company, held in Cleveland on the 6th day of January, 1869, immediately after the annual election, several resolutions were adopted by a majority of the Board, the most important of which, so far as we can now recall them, are substantially as follows:

One resolution was to increase the capital stock of the Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad Company $900,000. Another was to declare a scrip dividend of fifteen per cent upon the present or existing stock of the Company, and also a cash dividend of two per cent, upon said scrip dividend. Another was to execute and issue bonds of the Company of the denomination of $1,000,000 each, secured by a mortgage upon the road and property of the Company, convertible into the stock of the Company, and to be disposed of at not less than eighty cents on the dollar. Another was to abrogate all existing by-laws of the Company. Another was to appoint an Executive Committee with power to make by-laws and contracts, and to do all acts which the Board may do without reporting their action to the Board, and all the members of this Committee are residents of the City of New-York, and their names, according to the best of our recollection, are DIKEMAN, PRESSLER and TAYLOR. Another was to appoint F. A. LANE, of the City of New-York, the Financial Agent of the Company, with right to possess and hold all securities, bonds and moneys of the Company, without being required to give bond or security therefor. Another was to double-track the road, and also to construct a road from the line of the Company's road to a point on the Central Ohio Railroad. Another was to appropriate $500,000 to be placed in the hands of Financial Agent F. A. LANE, to pay attorney fees, and in otherwise used as he might deem expedient.

We cannot state the substance of these resolutions more particularly, because the majority of the Board, as soon as the Board was organized, appointed E. Gaylord Gammons, who had been elected one of the Directors on the Executive Committee of the Board, and by resolution excluded the Secretary of the Board from all meetings of the Board, and said GAMMONS, when the Board adjourned, took all the papers and resolutions without placing them upon record, since which time we have not seen him.

The meeting of the Board was of short duration, and was attended with much excitement and confusion, and when the Board adjourned, it was resolved that the Board should meet again only upon the call of the President, to be approved by the financial agent, the said F. A. LANE.

We deem these resolutions except the one relating to adjournment, to have been passed as they were called, and upon all of them we voted in the negative. Having no opportunity to prepare and enter our protests against said resolutions and action of the majority of the Board upon the records of the company, we do hereby protest against all and singular said resolutions and action, and all other resolutions and action of said Board, and we publish this our protest, in pursuance of the laws of the State of Ohio.

(Signed) J. M. MCCULLOUGH,
JAS. F. CLARKE,
S. F. JONES,
Directors Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad Co.

It is stated on the Street that the GERMAN GAMMONS who here figures as one of the Directors and Secretary of the new Board, is a clerk in LANE's law office in this City. The fact, if so, is far less important, and infinitely less remarkable, than that such a man as LANE himself, after the notoriety of the Erie affair, should have been able to buy his way to the control and ruin of the Cleveland and Pittsburg Road by paying the miserable consideration of fifty cents per share to the actual and nominal stockholders, for the use of their proxies.

The day's business at the office of the United States Assistant Treasurer was as follows: Total receipts, $1,136,058 62; total payments, $1,099,280 87; balance, $81,943,729 49. The receipts include for Customs, $491,000; for Gold Notes, $364,000.

The Treasury Office paid out $571,000 today, for Gold Interest on the Public Debt.

Official notice has been sent to the Stock and Bond holders of the Columbus, Chicago and Indiana Railway Company, and of the Chicago and Great Eastern Road, (consolidated with the former last April,) that a lease has been agreed upon of the whole line, with the Erie and the Atlantic and Great Western Companies, jointly, subject to the vote of the Stockholders at a special meeting, to be held at Columbus on the 29th inst. The transfers close at Columbus on the 20th inst.

Mr. SAMUEL BARROW, of the recent firm of Messrs. WORZ, DAVIS & BARROW, has taken an office at No. 40 Broad-street, as a Broker in Stocks and Gold. Mr. BARROW is a member of the New-York Stock Exchange Board.

The Continental Insurance Company has declared a semi-annual dividend of eight per cent, payable on and after the 14th inst.

The week's exports of domestic produce have been to the currency value of $3,276,680.

The New-Haven Journal says:

"We are informed that the Directors of the New-York and New-Haven Railroad Company have consented to issue $3,000,000 new stock, being one share of new for every two of old stock held by each stockholder. The new stock will be listed at 7 P M on the 5th of March next to each as shall elect to take it and pay $50 on each share on the 15th day of April next, and the remaining $75 when called for by the Directors."

The Standard Fire Insurance Company has declared a semi-annual dividend of 5 ⅌ cent. Also, an extra dividend of 2½ ⅌ cent., both free of tax and payable on demand.

The Firemen's Trust Insurance Company has declared a semi-annual dividend of 5 ⅌ cent., free of Government tax, payable on demand.

The Clayton (Del.) Herald says:

"It appears from Gov. BENEDICT's late message to the Legislature of our State, that the aggregate of our state indebtedness, contracted prior to 1861, [illegible] 000. The State's investments as an offset to its indebtedness, are $400,100, leaving a balance of indebtedness against the State, over and above her investments, of $400,000. Thus, over and above $400,000 loaned to railroad companies in the form of $200,000 loaned to the New-Castle and Frenchtown Turnpike and Railroad Company, which included, would leave the State owing a debt of but $200,000 (as has not been published, to assist in constructing railroads in this place."

The Central National Bank held its annual election today. The list of Directors, which was unanimously chosen, will be found in our advertising columns. At a subsequent meeting of the Directors, Mr. WM. A. WHITNOCK was unanimously elected President, and Mr. FRANCIS SKIDDY Vice President, for the ensuing year.

Internal Revenue Decisions.

INSURANCE TO INSURANCE COMPANIES.

OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, 3d A. 1868.

SIR: Yours of the 14th of December last, asking if the amount of commissions allowed to insurance agents should enter into the estimate of taxable receipts of insurance companies, was referred on the 19th ult. to Assessor HARRISON for information as to the mode in which your Company does business, the same not being clearly understood from your letter.

Mr. HARRISON states in his letter that the principle governing insurance companies, so far as pertains to their operations through agents, is substantially the same in every case. It appears that he is accustomed to require insurance companies to include in their returns of gross receipts for tax the commissions allowed their agents, but not the number of policies issued. Your Company keeps no such records with the rule of the office requiring only the actual receipts (what the same are in any case I know not) the premiums to be returned for tax, for although it may, for some reasons, be quite proper to consider the agent as being the agent of the insured quite as much, or even more than of one Company, yet it is clear that the agent is the agent soliciting for other than the agent of the Company, for purposes of tax under sec. 105, Revenue law, and if such, then all moneys paid to him for insurance are in effect paid to the Company, and are to be included in the estimate of gross receipts. What portion of the same are kept by the Company, and what retained or kept by the agent is, of course, entirely foreign to the proper estimate of all receipts.

In the matter of rebates allowed for a direct insurance, the case is entirely different. In the case of a direct insurance, the insured gave but $90, we will suppose, as premium, 10 per cent. deduction being allowed. Whatever, however, that business is effected through an agent, he is obliged to pay the entire amount of $100, and this, whether received by the Company or not, is nevertheless paid for insurance to the officer of the Company, and should therefore enter into the estimate of receipts.

Very respectfully, E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner.

WM. VANDERCOOK, Esq., Secretary New-Jersey Insurance Company, Newark, N. J.

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY offers a limited amount of its First Mortgage Bonds at par. Nine hundred and sixty miles of the line, west from Omaha, are now completed, and the whole grand line to the Pacific will be open for business in the Summer of 1869.

By its charter the Company is permitted to issue its own First Mortgage Bonds to the same amount as the Government Bonds, and no more. These Bonds are a First Mortgage upon the whole road and all its equipments, and give over eight per cent. on the investment. Such a mortgage upon what, for a long time will be the only railroad connecting the Atlantic and Pacific States, takes the highest rank as a safe security.

The price for the present is par, and accrued interest at 6 per cent. from July 1, 1868, in currency. Subscriptions will be received in New-York at the Company's office, No. 20 Nassau-st., and by JOHN J. CISCO & SON, Bankers, No. 59 Wall-st., and by the Company's advertised agents throughout the United States. Pamphlets, with full particulars, on application.

Bonds sent free, but parties subscribing through local agents will look to them for their safe delivery.

JOHN J. CISCO, Treasurer, New-York.

PACIFIC RAILROAD (of Missouri) 6 PER CENT. GOLD BONDS for sale by the undersigned. The net earnings of the Road for its fiscal year will be about $1,200,000, while the interest on the Mortgage Debt will be $420,000 in gold, thus affording a perfect security for investors. For further particulars, apply to

TUESDAY, Jan. 12—P. M.

The rates for Money to the Brokers, which suddenly advanced at the close of business yesterday to the equivalent of 10 ⅌ cent., (that is, 7 ⅌ cent. in Gold,) opened on the same terms this forenoon, but the demand being less urgent, there was considerable business done before the close of Bank hours at simple Currency Interest. This was probably induced by the fact that Money was abundant enough, if not overabundant, at the higher (on Gold) rate early in the day. The Brokers in the Public Funds were generally accommodated at 7 ⅌ cent., Currency; the Brokers in the Railways at from 10 to 7 ⅌ cent., and the Gold Brokers at the equivalent of 7@8 ⅌ cent., Currency. Altogether, the Money market cannot be called a very comfortable one for borrowers, except at extra rates of interest. Why this is so admits of a variety of explanations, such as the reduced greenback basis at bank, as compared with this time last year; the much higher price for stocks, especially the railways; the wants of the Pacific Railroads for temporary accommodation in advance of the regular sales of their own mortgages, and the local speculation, for New-York and Southern account, in cotton. The singular feature of the market is that while money commands extra rates of interest, nearly all departments of the Stock Exchange, the Gold Room and the Produce Exchange, (including Cotton,) are stubbornly sustained. Little or no impression was made upon the Gold Room to-day. The Public Funds opened with some signs of weakness, but closed firm; the Railways were better than at the close of business on Monday; the Southern State Bonds were well supported, and the Foreign Exchanges disposed to firmness, though the cash sales of Bills on the Street for cash, were reported 1@¼ ⅌ cent below the highest asking rates at the counters of the leading Bankers. The range of first-class sixty days' Exchange on London was 109¼@109¾ ⅌ cent.

The sales of Gold were at 135¼@135¾ ⅌ cent. The market closed at 135¼ ⅌ cent. as on Monday.

In the Government Stock Board the sales of 5-20s of 1867 were at 108½@¾ ⅌ cent. The new 1865s were sold a fraction below 108 ⅌ cent., but closed 106½ ⅌ cent. bid. The other descriptions of Gold-bearing bonds were steady at about the last prices of Monday. The Southern State Bonds were a fraction weaker on new Tennessees, and there was, perhaps, less eagerness than yesterday to buy other descriptions, but the changes in quotations at the close were very slight.

After the late Boards broke up, the following quotations were made for the Railways and other Stocks, as compared with Monday night. At the 10 o'clock A. M. Open Board, another essay was attempted to make Erie Common Stock active. About 5,000 shares were recorded as bought and sold at 38½@38¾ ⅌ cent., but the movement stopped with the orders and counter-orders of the manipulators themselves. The Cleveland and Pittsburg affair, as telegraphed to the morning papers from Cleveland, and the full particulars of which are published in another place, (the work of the same parties,) is especially damaging to any present effort to reinspire speculation, much less a decent measure of confidence in Erie. The general Railway market left off firm:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The Peace Conference at Paris has refused to admit Greece to participation in the proceedings, and opposed to his Government for instructions. The session of the Conference announced for yesterday was postponed in consequence. The Sultan has sent an envoy to Paris to negotiate a loan for war purposes.

There is a report in London to the effect that the leaders of the insurrection in Candia have fallen into the hands of the Turks, and been cast into prison.

CONGRESS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented a memorial signed by responsible parties, setting forth that the subsidies proposed to be given to the Northern Pacific Railroad and to the Eastern Division of the Union Pacific Road amount to $125,000,000, in addition to extensive land grants, and offering to do the work for $75,000,000 less, and give good security for the performance of the contract. Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN stated that he was opposed to granting any subsidies whatever. Mr. SUMNER introduced a bill to prevent the transfer to aliens of any grant or charter derived from the United States. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Mr. CONKLING reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs a bill for the relief of HELEN and HELOISE LINCOLN, two unknown white children, who were rescued from captivity among the Indians. It provides that each shall receive the interest on $5,000 for their education, and the principal on attaining their majority. The bill for the relief of Miss SUE MURPHY, for damages sustained during the war, was taken up, and general debate followed. The bill was not disposed of when the Senate adjourned.

Mr. BUTLER introduced in the House a bill to authorize the issue of a national currency, to insure its elasticity and stability, lessen the public debt, and reduce the rate of interest. He moved its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means, which was done, whereupon he moved to reconsider the motion, and supported his motion in a lengthy speech, which will be found in other columns of the TIMES this morning. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, after the 30th of June next, $350,000,000 in Treasury notes of various denominations, bearing no interest, which shall be receivable for all claims and demands against the United States, except in those cases where payment is specially contracted to be made in coin. Upon the issuance of these notes all National Banks are to cease to be banks of issue, and their circulation is to be called in and destroyed, and the same shall be done with all other bank bills and legal-tender issues when they are redeemed at the Treasury. The bill also provides that after the 30th of June next any person or association owning any bond of the United States bearing six per cent. interest in coin, may present the same to the Treasurer or any public depository designated for that purpose, and who shall have lodged in the Treasury of the United States sufficient security, and shall receive therefor ninety per cent. of the par on its face in certificates of value in such denomination, as he may choose, paying on that amount at the rate of three and sixty-five-hundredths per cent. per annum interest in coin for thirty days, and until he shall return an equal amount of said certificates to the Treasury of the United States; and such bonds shall remain in the Treasury as security for the certificates so delivered and the interest thereon, which shall be deducted from interest to be paid by the United States on such bonds at any time after thirty days. The owner of any bond so pledged may return certificates of value equal to ninety per cent. of the value thereof, and receive back his bond less the interest, and said certificates and the amount therefor paid to him, and the Treasurer shall, during the time of its deposit, pay to the owner the accrued interest beyond that due on the certificates, once in every six months. The concluding section of the bill provides for the issue of a metallic fractional currency. Mr. BUTLER's motion to reconsider was laid on the table. A resolution was passed directing the War Department to send to the Court of Claims the papers and evidence taken by a Special Commission appointed to adjust certain claims made against that Department by some Western men. The Commission acted upon claims, taking from each individual a receipt in full. These persons now sue in the Court of Claims for the difference between what they received and what they think they are entitled to. Hence it is important the Court should have the evidence taken by the Commission. Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Elections, reported the case of J. S. Chalmers as delegate from Wyoming Territory. Mr. WASHBURNE objected to his admission, on the ground that the Territory was not organized, and to State officers had never been at elections. Mr. Chalmers's certificate, derived from a mass meeting, was referred back to the Committee on Elections for investigation and report. The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was made the special order for to-day. A resolution was passed granting the use of the Rotunda and the old Hall of Representatives for the inauguration ball. Debate was resumed on the bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors and marines, and Mr. WASHBURNE of Indiana made a lengthy speech in favor of its passage. The further consideration of the bill was postponed to Feb. 3. Mr. BAKER reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs the joint resolution heretofore printed, proposing to extend the sovereignty of the United States over Hayti and St. Domingo. He said that from the best information he could get, he believed the people of those islands desired such protectorates. After some debate, during which Mr. HAYES answered a great many questions in explanation of the resolution, he announced that it should go over till to-day. The House then adjourned.

GENERAL.

Advices from Colima, Mexico, represent that Gov. VEGA is endeavoring to obtain more liberal legislation from the State Legislature. Several highway robberies were recently captured and shot near Colima. Severe convulsions of the earth had occurred in different parts of the country, producing terrible land slides, involving the loss of a number of lives and small streams suddenly appeared in heretofore barren deserts. At Guadalajara a number of citizens were recently shot for political offences, and considerable ill feeling created in consequence. There were fears of another revolution.

A dispatch from Havana says it is understood that the Commission of citizens who have gone to hold a conference with the rebel chiefs are empowered to grant them pardon and restoration to all political rights, provided they surrender and consent that the island continue under Spanish authority. The rebels are pressing the siege of Nuevitas actively, and have defeated a body of troops sent to the relief of the garrison.

WILLIAM MCCLELLAN has been elected Speaker of the Nebraska House of Representatives, and E. B. TAYLOR President of the Senate. The message of Gov. BUTLER, delivered immediately after the organization of the Legislature, commended the encouragement of immigration, a liberal free-school system, and land grants for the erection of bridges across the Platte River at Ashland, Columbus, Grand Island and North Platte. These bridges will enable the people of a rich portion of Southern Nebraska to avail themselves of the section of the Pacific Railroad, from which the river is now entirely cutting them off. The State will soon have control over three millions and a quarter acres, and a quarter of a million acres of these lands will be sold within the next two years. The Governor also urged the immediate erection of a State University and agricultural college. The Senatorial election takes place on the 19th.

The Bank of Montreal (Canada) was entered by burglars Monday night, the safe blown open, and robbed of $60,000 in Canada legal-tender notes. The burglars were subsequently seen at Tonawanda, N. Y.

The Legislature of New-Jersey met yesterday at Trenton, and organized by the choice of RUFUS R. LITTLE, of Monmouth, as President of the Senate, and JOSEPH R. CORSON, of Warren, as Secretary; and LEON ABBETT, of Hudson, as Speaker of the House, and ALEXANDER M. JOHNSON, of Mercer, as Clerk. After the organization the Message of the Governor was received and read.

Intelligence is received at Portland, Me., of the probable loss, with all hands on board, of the British brig Jane Brandridge, of Bagged Island, about forty miles west of Halifax. She was on her way to Portland, from Pictou, Nova Scotia, with coal. She had three passengers, two of whom were women.

On Thursday afternoon last a stranger entering the station at Fond du Lac, Wis., for the purpose of taking the train, was set upon and murdered at the gate, his watch and money stolen, his body left where it fell, while his assassin took the cars.

A prize-fight took place yesterday on Choteau Island, near St. Louis, between ALLEN and DAVIS. ALLEN won in forty-three rounds.

The cause of the recent accident on the Buffalo and Erie division of the Lake Shore Railroad was "a misplaced switch." The train was the Cincinnati express coming east, and was composed of two baggage cars, one emigrant car and two passenger coaches. It was entirely thrown from the track, but fortunately no one was seriously hurt. The track was completely blockaded for ten hours.

The Nevada Legislature yesterday reelected WM. M. STEWART United States Senator.

The Metropolitan Board of Health held a special session yesterday afternoon, and accepted the resignation of Dr. E. B. DALTON as Sanitary Superintendent, and appointed Inspector JAMES as a temporary substitute. Dr. DALTON's resignation was occasioned by the refusal of the Board to modify an order recently issued, that the members of the Sanitary Corps should devote eight hours per day to the work of their department. Prof. CHANDLER submitted a report on kerosene, and Commissioner SMITH offered a report on the cattle plague, after which the Board adjourned.

A meeting took place last night at No. 24 Cooper Institute, for the purpose of organizing an association to carry out sundry radical views in both government and social life. The speakers were Messrs. IRA B. DAVIS, L. THOMPSON, P. MCCORMICK, Dr. and Mrs. HALLOCK, Mrs. S. F. NORTON, Dr. CLEMENS ROOSEVELT and Dr. SCHWARZHAMMER. Mr. WARREN CHASE was in the chair. An address was presented and arguments entered upon it.

A number of entertaining lectures were delivered last evening. Miss ANNA DICKINSON lectured at the Cooper Institute on "Fair Play;" Mr. RANDOLPH, at the Chapel of the Crown of Life, on "Work;" Rev. Dr. SUNDERLAND, at the Thirteenth-street Presbyterian Church, on "Phases of Life;" Bishop CLARK, at Lyric Hall, on "Man;" Rev. Mr. BACON, before the Western Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, on "Admiral Foote," and Prof. SCHLEIERMEYER, at the Historical Society Rooms, on "Asia."

Cotton closed quite actively yesterday at rather firmer prices. Breadstuffs were depressed and lower, on a light trade. Provisions in moderate request. Hogs dearer. Groceries inactive. Freights dull.

The Board of Education.

The election of a Clerk to the Board of Education takes place this evening. Mr. BOSSE, the present Clerk, is a candidate for reelection, and the only opposition to him comes from the political "Ring" which has control of the Democratic Party in this City. The ground of that opposition is the fact that Mr. BOSSE has always opposed, and has thus far defeated, the attempts of the "Ring" to control the disbursements of the money required for the support of our public schools,—to levy assessments upon the teachers and other employes of the Board for political purposes, and in these and other ways, establish the same authority over this, as they already wield over all other departments of the public service.

They have started an opposition candidate, in whom if elected they are sure of finding a friend instead of an opponent of their partisan and corrupt designs.

We are confident the great mass of our citizens who feel an interest in our Common School system, and who have given any attention to its practical working, would regard the change proposed as exceedingly disastrous to the system, and damaging to the interests of popular education in the City. The expenses of the Board are heavy, and have increased with a rapidity which has astonished us, as it has to others, needless and alarming; though a correspondent, whose letter will be found elsewhere, submits statistics which prove, in his judgment, that this increase has been neither excessive in itself nor beyond the fair and legitimate growth of the City in population, and in increased demand for educational accommodations.

However this may be, the expenses of the Board are certainly not likely to be made less by the change proposed. Mr. BOSSE is an efficient, experienced and capable officer, and has done in the past, as he will do in the future, everything in his power to keep its management out of politics and to make it effective and economical. We hope he will be reelected.

The Senatorial Question.

The Democrats are proposing a plan by which they can take a hand in the election of United States Senator. The contest in the Republican ranks is close and sharp, MORGAN and FERROS being the leading candidates. It is proposed by the Democratic members of the Legislature, or on their behalf, that if a certain number of Republicans will agree to vote for some third man,—a Republican not open to the objections urged against both the present candidates,—the Democrats will vote for him also, and thus secure his election.

That this is feasible may be seen by a glance at the relative strength of parties in the Legislature. In the Senate there are seventeen Republicans and fifteen Democrats; in the Assembly seventy-five Republicans and fifty-three Democrats—a Republican majority of two in the Senate, twenty-two in the Assembly,—and twenty-four on joint ballot. If two Republican Senators and twelve Republican Assemblymen should vote steadily for some third candidate, and should be reinforced by the Democratic vote in each House, they could secure his election, as he would receive seventeen votes in the Senate and sixty-five in the Assembly,—a majority of each branch.

The first protest against this scheme comes of course from the Republicans, and rests on party grounds. The duty and responsibility of electing a Senator, as of doing everything else, is held to rest on the Republican Party,—because that party is in the majority. Democrats, being a minority, count for nothing. Their wishes, principles, opinions and preferences have nothing whatever to do with actual legislation of any kind; and in everything connected in any way with party interests they are to be set aside,—left out of the case altogether,—treated absolutely as if there were no such creatures in existence. The Republicans are to meet in caucus,—nominate by a majority vote their candidate,—and then elect him in the Legislature, without taking into the account at all the wishes of the Democratic members. This is the recognized style of government by party,—possible under every form of free institutions and sanctioned in ours by usage, discipline and party morality.

It is alleged and, as we have already said, is generally conceded that the contest in caucus will be decided by money. In caucus the contest is strictly a family affair,—ignored by the law, which knows nothing of such things as caucuses,—and thus open to influences of friendship, bribery or anything else. In caucus a man caring nothing for any of the candidates,—may for an office, or a thousand dollars, or any other motive,—agree to support FERROS or MORGAN, or anybody else, without breach of any law or other obligation, except the obligation which rests upon every man not to be governed by base and dishonest motives,—of which very little account is taken, in caucus or out of it, nowadays. It seems to be generally understood that votes in caucus will thus be bought, for the one or the other, and that one or the other will thus be nominated and made the candidate of the Republican Party. The result, when reached, no matter how, becomes, by party usage binding upon the whole party; and any Republican who should refuse to ratify it by refusing to vote in the Legislature for the candidate thus fixed upon, will be hooted and hounded out of the party, as a traitor to its principles, and branded as a political vagabond for the rest of his life.

Human ingenuity, stimulated to the utmost by the basest passions, could not contrive any more effectual way of defeating the real intent and meaning of the constitutional provision for the election of Senators, and of degrading and debasing the working of our whole political system than this. But it is the established law of all parties, and is enforced by all with equal and relentless severity. So settled and fixed has it become, that it may be regarded as an essential and inevitable element of republican institutions. Where the forms of government are the freest, will the caucus rule, (which is the actual rule,) be the most absolute and tyrannical. It has reached its highest point thus far in the rule of "the Ring" in this City, which in theory enjoys democratic freedom in absolute perfection.

The only way in which any Republican can protect himself from the political ruin which attends upon a disregard of caucus dictation, is by having enough associates to make his rebellion respectable and successful. If two Republican Senators and twelve Republican Assemblymen were to refuse to go into the party caucus at all, or to vote in the Legislature for the caucus nominee, but were to select a Republican candidate for themselves, and to vote for him and nobody else,—and then the fifteen Democrats in the Senate and the fifty-three Democrats in the Assembly were to vote for him also, thus securing his election, they could to a considerable extent protect themselves against the charge of treason to their party. At all events the charge would be so absurd, and so grossly in violation of the independence and personal rights of individual members, that it would carry but little weight.

But we do not apprehend the success of any such movement. The Republicans will go into caucus,—all of them, probably, as usual; and then, after the usual struggle and by the use of the usual means, including lavish promises of office and equally lavish payments of money, a majority of the Republicans will be brought to vote for one of the candidates, MORGAN or FERROS; and from that time forward every Republican will feel as much bound to vote in the Legislature for the man thus selected in caucus, as if he had been his first, last and only choice. And we are inclined to think that Senator MORGAN will thus achieve a reelection.

The citizens of this glorious Republic have a great many advantages over the nations of the Old World; and one of the greatest of them all lies in the fact that they are not compelled to leave home in order to "see with how little wisdom the world is governed."

The Rich and the Poor—The Tendency of Events.

Commissioner WELLS, in his recent able Report, says that in this country the Rich are growing richer and the Poor poorer. He gives this as the result of his inquiries into the condition and prospects of the nation. If it be a fact, it is one of evil omen. It shows that republican institutions cannot save a nation from going the downward road, or its people from degradation and decay.

That in England the rich have been growing richer and the poor poorer for very many years, has been generally conceded, and has been deemed in this country the natural result of her form of government, in which the rich alone virtually control the administration of affairs. But if the same tendency is visible here,—if in this democratic Republic, where the people have all power, and not only make the laws but control their execution, the rich are growing richer and the poor poorer,—then it is clear that forms of government do not control the material conditions of the people who live under them. And it is also clear that the laws which do control the production and distribution of wealth cannot be abrogated or changed by governmental action, that they are essentially the same in a republic as in a monarchy, and that even where the poor have all political power, they cannot avert or evade the operation of those laws under which they are constantly pressed downward in the social scale.

Mr. WELLS traces this fact of a general decline in the condition of workingmen in this country, largely to injurious legislation,—to protective tariffs, an irredeemable currency, &c. But as the class affected is in full possession of political power, and is thus responsible for the laws in question, the explanation by no means vindicates the adequacy of democratic institutions. So far as the legislation of the country is responsible for the evil, it ought most certainly to be amended; and Congress owes the subject its most careful and intelligent study. The question is one, not for abstract reasoning,—it is one of fact. Theorists may prove, no matter how conclusively, that protective tariffs and paper money are based on sound principles of political economy, and that they ought to improve the material condition of the great mass of the people; but if, as a matter of fact they do not, then they ought to be abandoned.

But whatever may be the reason, we fear that Mr. WELLS is right, and that in this country, as in every other, the condition of the great mass of the people—those who live by labor in some form—is growing steadily worse instead of better. And in saying this we do not refer to the poorest classes—to the hopeless and degraded poor, such as are to be found always in great cities, and scarcely ever anywhere else,—but to the better class of workers,—mechanics of all kinds and laborers of all grades,—men who are thrifty and industrious, and who have a laudable ambition to rise in the world, and to give their children a position in advance of that which they have been able to achieve for themselves. It is this class of our people who are losing ground, steadily and constantly, in their struggle: and it is from this class that the great and growing army of the hopeless and degraded poor is slowly but steadily recruited.

Our mechanics and other workingmen have less of home comforts,—they cannot live in as good houses, they cannot wear as good clothing, nor eat as good food, nor get for themselves and their families as many luxuries now, as they could twenty or even ten years ago. Yet we hear from employers of every grade on every side, that wages have enormously increased in every department of labor,—so enormously in many of these departments, as to make the employment of labor unprofitable. And this is undoubtedly true. But it is only half the truth. The price of everything which the laboring man has to buy has increased more than the price of labor—the only thing he has to sell. The general fact is thus stated by Mr. WELLS:

"The aggregate wealth of the country is increasing, probably, as rapidly as at any former period; yet it does not follow that there is the same increase in general prosperity. The laborer, especially he who has a large family to support, is not as prosperous as he was in 1860. His wages have not increased in proportion to the increase in the cost of his living. There is, therefore, as frequently to the distribution of our annual product, which we mean, in no small degree, refer to artificial causes. This inequality exists even among the working classes themselves. The single man or woman, working for his or her support alone, is in the receipt of a rate of wages from which savings may be made equal, or greater than ever before, especially in the manufacturing towns, where the price of board is, to a certain extent, regulated artificially by the employer. Unmarried operatives, therefore, gain; while those who are obliged to support their own families in hired tenements lose. Hence, deposits in savings banks increase, while marriage is discouraged; and the forced employment of young children is made a necessity in order that the family may live."

Now, so far as this is the result of "artificial causes,"—so far as it can be traced to a false system of tariffs, or currency, or taxation in any form, Congress may and must apply a remedy. Those systems must be revised and amended, in the interest and for the relief of that large class upon whom they work so injuriously.

But the laboring men themselves in this country, as in every other, feel that the evil lies deeper than in these laws. They feel that, in the division of the products of their labor, they get less, while the capitalists who supply the money get more, than justly belongs to them: and their constant struggle is to alter this proportion. They want a larger share of the profits, giving a smaller share to capital. This is the object of strikes,—of eight-hour laws and of the many similar devices resorted to by workingmen, or those who profess to speak and act in their behalf.

Whether labor has gained or lost by these struggles,—whether they can by such devices possibly improve their condition, or whether they must look to other forms and modes of action, are questions of great importance to them and to society at large, which we do not propose at present to discuss. But it is impossible not to sympathize with this effort of labor to improve its condition and to secure for itself something more nearly what it regards as its just and fair share in the distribution of the wealth that is constantly produced,—whatever we may think of the means by which that object is sought. And this sympathy with the effort should make us tolerant of the means, and of the motives which prompt them, even when both may seem to us most mistaken.

For the degradation of labor, in any community, is the degradation of the community itself. Where the condition of the laboring class grows worse instead of better, there all the interests of the State are in peril. It is not enough that the condition of a select class grows better,—that a few grow richer, more cultivated and more comfortable from year to year; this is well, but only when the great body of the people share in the advance. If it is achieved at the expense of the great mass,—if this improvement is secured only by their decline,—the result is deplorable and ominous of ruin.

The Diplomatic and Consular Service.

American diplomacy in the East, and particularly with China and Japan, has been, on the whole, hitherto a success. Yet we fear that even this has suffered somewhat from the universal defects of our civil service, and that more than once a broad and admirable general policy has been defeated or neutralized by unworthy representation in details. Overmuch faith is not, of course, to be put in the visits, the presents, the dashing body-guard and the "burning of powder and pouring of champagne," whereby, to use the words of our Yokohama correspondent, the English Minister, Sir HARRY PARKES, keeps himself and his Government continually before the Japanese, until they forget that there is any other people. But there is much that is worth thinking about in the unflattering comparison which this same correspondent makes between the whole English diplomatic system in the East and our own:

"Their whole diplomatic system is excellent. Their Consuls are educated men, have been student interpreters, and will be, eventually, Ministers and Ambassadors. They are well paid and sure of their position for life. Of our own system I am ashamed to speak. Those who have visited foreign ports know very well what it amounts to. Of three important points in the East, the United States is represented in one by a Frenchman, with most intolerable brogue and a most despicable salary, and in the other two by Germans—all excellent men, but not the ones to represent Americans abroad."

It is only just to acknowledge that our diplomatic and consular service during the last eight years has been in general a great improvement on that of the eight years preceding. At one time it was found, according to a statement made in Congress, that not one of our foreign Ministers, and hardly one even of our foreign Consuls, could speak any language but his own; that the backwoods had furnished forth a good share of our representation in maritime ports; and that the whole foreign service had been turned into a means of rewarding party devotion,—and was only that, and nothing more.

If we have advanced from that low standard, particularly in the case of Ministers to leading Powers, yet there is still chance for improvement. Of course, in a well-trained competitive civil service lies the hope of permanent excellence; but, as that is a growth of years, the immediate remedy must consist in a wise selection of the most competent men, making supposed party claims a secondary consideration. Assiduous shouldering of a torch through a political canvass has its good points, and so has assiduous rallying of voters on election day; but these exercises do not of themselves fit men for diplomatic or consular duties. Nor is it, we submit, an all-sufficient ground for a foreign appointment that a youth wants to sow his wild oats; or is troublesome to his friends; or wishes to study his profession in Europe; or wants to take a peep at foreign picture galleries; or is tired of America; or that, being incompetent himself, he is recommended by somebody else who is incompetent, and deserves political reward; or that he withdrew from the contest over a political nomination at home in favor of somebody else. In short, one of the easiest ways of enumerating what are not qualifications to foreign service, is to make a list of those which have been most efficient in times gone by. We must change all that, if we would be well served in foreign capitals and ports.

MINOR TOPICS.

President JOHNSON will have a splendid chance to serve his country during the next two months. All he will have to do will be to use that celebrated veto of his, right and left, on all schemes of extravagance and all jobs of corruption that may come before him after they have passed Congress. There are scores of such schemes now before Congress, and it is quite certain that some of them will pass. If he will veto them remorselessly, as he may well do, having no favors to ask and no enemies to conciliate, he will not only prevent some of them from becoming law, but will leave behind him a title for grateful remembrance. Though President JOHNSON has not much power left him, he has still the power of—veto!

The Police have got an entirely new clew in the case of the murder of Mr. ROSENA. Our reporters give full details of the circumstances thus far developed. The case becomes daily more and more complicated; but the Police, and especially the detective force, must not relax their efforts to get hold of the murderer if they would retain any credit at all for their efficiency or usefulness in the City.

It will be seen by an announcement among our amusement advertisements that Mr. BATEMAN has retired from operatic management, and has assigned all his contracts with the artists and chorus comprising BATEMAN's Opera Bouffe Company, and disposed of all his wardrobe, music and properties to JAMES FISK, Jr., the well-known "Erie" operator, from whom he received a "very advantageous offer."

It would be a fine thing for the United States to establish a "protectorate" over Hayti and St. Domingo, as Gen. BANKS desires they should. [See his movement in Congress yesterday.] It would furnish several nice places to people who want them. It would give a number of nice jobs to parties who need them. It would transfer some money from the Treasury into the hands of those who would like to get it. It would give us a million more blacks to protect. It would give us a tropical and anarchical island to govern. It would give our soldiers a chance to fight. By adding to our debt, it would enlarge the problem with which Gen. BUTLER amuses himself; and by adding to our taxes and troubles, it would give the people something new to think about.

In the matter of finances Gen. BUTLER is still ahead of the whole crowd, and we think will continue to be so. Instead of confining his attention to the various schemes proposed for paying the public debt, and getting back to specie payments, he goes the "whole hog" and insists on never going back to specie again, inasmuch as specie is a "relic of barbarism," and the only true currency,—the only kind of money fit to be used by a free and enlightened people, is an "inconvertible paper currency," that is notes promising to pay specie but never intending to do so. The General develops and argues this proposition at great length in an elaborate speech which he read in Congress yesterday and which will be found in another part of this morning's TIMES. We don't think anybody, in Congress or out, can go much further than this in speculations about the Currency question. The General himself can do nothing more brilliant in the line of financial discovery, but he will probably proceed at once to apply his theory to Government bonds, and every other form of promises to pay,—as well as to the particular style of notes known as greenbacks. And why not extend it to private promises as well as public? Why should Government monopolize the right to promise without intending to perform? We are curious to see who will be the first member of Congress to second the General's device.

Money worked close and active most of yesterday, but wound up unexpectedly easy, with quite liberal offerings. There were corresponding fluctuations in the Fund and Stock values, which closed buoyantly on an increasing volume of business. Gold steady. Exchange rather firmer. Produce exports of the week equal to $3,276,650.

Dr. CHAPIN lectures this evening, at the Cooper Institute, on COLUMBUS, for the benefit of the "Woman's Hospital." The attractions of the lecture itself will doubtless fill the hall; but the excellent object to be served ought to excite an interest still more general and profound. The advertisement will be found in another column.

A short time ago it was reported that some English capitalists and engineers had offered to build an underground railway in New-York. If we were to allow them, we would probably in time have such a railway, which there is not much prospect of our having, as things now are. It is now reported that some English capitalists are about to establish a Pneumatic Dispatch in New-York. We hope they will be permitted to make the attempt without interruption.

None of the kerosene sold in this City is safe. All of it is dangerous to the life and property of those who use it. Benzine is universally mixed with it. See the report of Prof. CHANDLER in the proceedings of the Board of Health.

We mentioned yesterday the mischievous use which was made on Monday of a rumor to the effect that the Treasury Department was about to market a further batch of coin-bearing bonds. Such rumors, utterly false though they be, gain temporary credence, from the known or assured power of the Department to make such further issues, even though the power be of a very limited nature. And such rumors will continue to be put in circulation and to be traded upon, as long as the Secretary of the Treasury is left even a vestige of authority to enlarge the volume of the six per cent. coin-bearing obligations. Only one remedy is available, to protect the business public, from injury to their interests in the public funds, by the forced depression of fund values. A positive and definite enactment of Congress, explicitly closing up all old authorizations of additional six per cent. gold-bond issues, and as plainly prohibiting any augmentation of this form of the national securities, under any pretence whatsoever, will effectually dispose of even the possibility of untruthful reports, and the danger growing out of their circulation.

The birth of BURNS is to be celebrated on its anniversary, the 25th inst., by a dinner at the Metropolitan Hotel, under the direction, not of the St. Andrew Society, but of a company of gentlemen who insist on the presence of ladies,—an innovation to which the managers of the Society in question were not willing to assent. The proposed change seems to us eminently proper, and calculated to prevent the scenes of over-boisterous and somewhat unseemly mirth by which such celebrations are occasionally attended. And we are quite sure very many of the cultivated and intelligent ladies of the City would regard as a special favor the privilege of sharing in the rational and sensible exercises of such an occasion. We cannot doubt that the experiment will prove a success, as we are assured no pains will be spared to make it one.

Widening and deepening the tortuous and shallow channel at Hell Gate has been begun. The work will require a great expenditure of money and time, but it will doubtless be carried to a successful end, as the interests of commerce require that the improvement shall be made. The owners of the Long Island Sound coasting vessels will rejoice heartily when these additional facilities for navigation are perfected. They will then be relieved of the impositions and exactions of the Hell Gate pilots, who have too long held a monopoly which is as unjust as it has been onerous. We observe that a modification of the Hell Gate Pilot laws, which was mooted last Winter at Albany, but which failed to pass, has been revived during the present session.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatre Francais.

It will be conceded that it is no easy task to burlesque opera bouffe. The WOMBATS Sisters endeavored to do so, and failed. M. HERVE has, however, made the experiment, and succeeded. "L'Œil Crevé" is weaker than "Genevieve de Brabant," and, in fact, weaker than any of OFFENBACH's works; but it is filled with all the little contrivances which the King of the Bouffe Parisiens has made so popular. The dialogue is certainly more absurd than anything that ever came from the immodest brains of Messrs. MEILHAC and HALEVY. "L'Œil Crevé" first saw the light in October of last year, at the Folies-Dramatiques, in Paris, a locality for which it was well suited, and where it obtained a great success. We can believe that the manner of production by Mr. GRAU is better than it was in Paris, for in the French metropolis opera bouffe occupies a different position to what it does here. It is not considered the best form of musical work. Italian opera, French grand opera and opera comique outrank it. In New-York we having nothing but opera bouffe and negro minstrelsy—a difference after all more in the matter of cork than anything else. Mr. GRAU has spared no expense in putting a work upon the stage which we think will not long retain it. Opera bouffe has, it seems, had its day—a long and prosperous one, but exhaustive. No sort of economy has been exercised in the manner of its production, and now any prudence in this direction will be regarded as parsimony. "Genevieve de Brabant" was a model of stage sumptuousness and liberal management. So also is "La Periohole," at Pike's. In HERVE's work there is not the same opportunity, but every thing has been done by Mr. GRAU that was possible, and this means a great deal. The same care bestowed on a better class of work would, we think, insure an equally good remunerative result, perhaps better. The dresses of the archers (they are bowmen, not cross-bowmen, as described—there is not a cross-bow among them,) and the peasants are particularly good. The leading characters are of course well provided for. And of leading characters there is no end. The composer, who is also the author of the libretto, seems to have studied literature in a lunatic asylum, and to have made the most of the individualities he found there. Of plot there is absolutely none. The skeleton of the mosquito is colossal in comparison with the slight structure which supports this opera. Nevertheless there is a good deal of business and action, and the scenes are cheerful and picturesque. We cannot say the same for the scenery, which is stiff. What HERVE lacks in constructiveness he makes up in the maddest riot of words ever listened to by a sane audience. And writing nonsense, evidently from sheer disposition, he has often dropped upon the quaintest conceits. Thus while the heroine is about to flee she is enjoined by her intendant "to pack her trunks, and to take some shirtings, some crockery, a bible, bed, a mattress and half a leg of mutton;" then there is a wonderful paragraph called the atmospheric lotgier, which calls

[illegible]

The music is pretty and consistent throughout. If some the variety of Offenbachian, but is more melodious and appropriate on this account. Of the cast, Mlle. DESCLAUZAS made the best impression; she is pretty and sings without affectation. Mme. ROSE-DEGE has not the opportunity in this opera that she had in "Genevieve," and labored with her pieces. The same remark applies to M. CAZEAUX. The part of Grenie was played by M. GABEL, who was quick and effective in all the business of the stage, and again proved that he is an artist capable of individualizing any role. The chorus and orchestra (under the direction of Mr. ROSE-DEGE) were both admirable. "L'Œil Crevé" did not create a sensation, but the exception is sufficient to justify its maintenance on the bills until further notice.

The Philharmonic Society.

The one hundred and seventeenth concert of the New-York Philharmonic Society took place at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening. The attendance reminded us of the days when even the old Academy was insufficient to accommodate the members. Under the excellent management of Prof. DORESKE the Society is rapidly regaining its old popularity. It is clear that the present Academy is too small. There was not a vacant seat from parquette to amphitheatre, and even the lobbies and staircases were occupied. The programme opened with HAYDN's symphony in B flat, which was of course admirably played under the steady baton of Mr. CARL BERGMANN. The music of stringed instruments tells with remarkable effect in the works of the grand old master. The overture to "Semiramide," by CARAFA—played originally at the symphony soirée of Mr. THOS. THOMAS—hardly repays the trouble that has been bestowed upon it. It is well built and effective, but it says nothing that has not been said more brilliantly by later writers. It seems a pity to disturb the rest into which it had fallen. The orchestra gave it the fullest interpretation, but it neither astonished nor delighted the listener. The musical resurrectionists are busy this season—a "poème symphonique" by LISZT was also dug up for the occasion. It is called "Ce qu'on entend sur la montagne," and is the earliest of the Abbé's larger orchestral works. There is a grand religious theme in the last movement which redeems the work from mediocrity. Otherwise it is tedious and mechanical. The soloists were Mme. CAMPEZA USSO and Mr. S. B. MILLS, who, strangely enough, both played concertos by BEETHOVEN. This odd arrangement was rendered necessary, we are informed, by the inability of the lady, from incessant professional occupation, to study another piece. We are disposed to think that no necessity of the sort should prevail in a society of the importance of the Philharmonic. If soloists are necessary at all, they should be held to a strict reckoning, and not be permitted to change their pieces and their places on the programme because they have not time to occupy them properly. At all events it is manifestly absurd that two concertos by any one composer should be played on the same evening, and very little, we think, can be said (save in the way of gallantry toward a lady artiste) for putting the shortest (a single movement) first and the longest last. Mme. CAMPEZA USSO selected the first movement from the concerto opus 61; and Mr. MILLS played the entire concerto in E flat opus 73—a work fifty minutes long, and demanding months of preparation. Mme. USSO introduced a brilliant cadenza by JOACHIM, and played it with fire and strength. These qualities were not noticeable in the real portion of the concerto itself. We say this with the highest respect for the lady's talent. We have in these columns recorded the appreciation we hold for her remarkable attainments—her sensitive phrasing, her pure and clear tone, and her executive ability. But a concerto

He Protests, and the Conference is Postponed in Consequence.

Reported Capture and Imprisonment of Candian Insurgents.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

The Representative of Greece Denied Admission to the Peace Conference.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

For some unexplained reason RIZOS RANGABE, the Grecian Ambassador at Paris, who it was supposed would represent Greece in the Conference, has been refused participation in its sessions. He has protested against his exclusion, and appealed to the Grecian Government at Athens for instructions. The Conference will await the action of Greece in this matter, and the session announced for to-day will probably be postponed for a time in consequence.

CUBA.

The Commissioners to the Rebels—The Siege of Nuevitas.

HAVANA, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

It is reported on good authority that the Commission, which left for Nuevitas yesterday to meet the rebel chiefs at Bayamo, is fully empowered to concede pardon and political rights and liberties, on the basis that the Island of Cuba shall continue under the flag of Spain.

The United States steamer Gettysburg has returned from Nuevitas. The rebels were closely pressing the siege of the town. The garrison had turned one of the churches into a fortress, and with the assistance of the Spanish vessels of war in the harbor, were holding out until reinforcements could reach them. A detachment of troops sent by land to their relief was defeated by the insurgents. The latter have no artillery, but are well supplied with Spencer rifles, which they use with effect.

The planters of the surrounding country were much disheartened by fears of famine.

A large party, about 400 in number, consisting mostly of cigar makers, attempted to leave the city in a body on Monday last, on the Western Railroad. It was suspected that their object was to produce a revolt in the town of Candelaria. All who had passports were allowed to proceed, but the rest were detained, and obliged to return home. Up to the present moment there has been no disturbance whatever in Candelaria.

Captain-General DULCE is working industriously to reconcile the political factions here and make the extremists listen to reason, and is personally gaining ground in the esteem of order-loving citizens of all parties.

An amnesty proclamation by the Captain-General appears in the Gaceta to-day. It releases all political prisoners, terminates all trials for political offences now in progress, and holds out unconditional pardon to all insurgents who lay down their arms within forty days.

MEXICO.

Legislation in Colima—Execution of Robbers—Terrible Land Slides.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, Jan. 11.

Advices from Mexico give a rumor that Gov. VEGA, of Colima, has obtained three months' leave of absence, to visit the interior. The Governor is represented as exerting his influence in behalf of more liberal legislation by the State Legislature. The system of taxation lately introduced is regarded as unpopular. Most of the influential citizens will probably abandon the State.

A new light-house is to be created at Manzanillo, to take the place of the present miserable affair. A good wagon road is also to be built between Manzanillo and Colima. The authorities are acting vigorously against the highway robbers. Three road robbers were recently captured and shot near Colima.

Terrible land-slides had occurred in different parts of the country, involving considerable loss of life. Creeks had appeared where previously nothing but barren deserts had existed. The commotions were attended with continuous rumblings of the earth.

A number of citizens of Guadalajara had been condemned and shot for political offences. The affair created ill feeling against the Government, and the country seemed ripe for another revolution.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT

A Sleeping Car Started Down an Embankment—Three Persons Killed and Others Injured.

PITTSBURGH, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

A fatal accident occurred at an early hour this morning to the night train on the Pan-Handle Railroad, at Cork's Run Point, about three miles below this city. The heavy rains yesterday washed the earth from beneath the track, and left hundreds of ties without foundation. When the train reached the place all the cars went over but the rear sleeping-car, which became detached from the other portion of the train, and was hurled over an embankment fully sixty feet high. The car contained seven persons, out of which number three were killed instantly and the others were seriously injured. The names of those killed were Mr. JOHN ALLEN, conductor of the sleeping-car; Mr. C. McPEAKER, of Springfield, Ohio; ROBERT CHERRY, Pennsylvania. HENRY C. BARKERY, also of Springfield, and a young student who was on his way to the Western College, are thought to be mortally wounded. JOHN BARNUM, driver, from Kentucky, was injured in the foot. Pocket-books, watches and shoes were found this morning on the debris—the property of the unfortunate passengers. The wreck took fire immediately after the accident, but the flames were with extreme difficulty extinguished and an additional horror prevented. The bodies of the killed were brought to this city and a Coroner summoned to hold an inquest.

A New International Bridge at Niagara Proposed.

BUFFALO, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

The Joint Committee of the City Council and citizens, appointed to take action on the building of a bridge over the Niagara River to connect Buffalo with the Canada shore, held a meeting this afternoon. JAMES W. PARKER, JOHN H. VOUGHT, W. B. BISBEE and GEORGE S. WARDWELL were appointed a committee to confer with the New-York Central, Erie and Grand Trunk Railroads, or other corporations interested in the project, and report.

Annual Meeting of the Connecticut Temperance Union.

HARTFORD, Conn., Tuesday, Jan. 12.

The Connecticut Temperance Union held its second annual meeting in this city to-day. At the morning service speeches were made by Wm. M. TRAVER, Secretary of the Massachusetts Alliance; F. H. STEARNS, Agent for the National Society, and Rev. Dr. CUMMINGS, President of the Wesleyan University, after which the Secretary's report was read.

At the afternoon services a list of officers for the ensuing year was reported, with Ex-Gov. WILLIAM A. BUCKINGHAM as President. Gov. BUCKINGHAM spoke briefly, urging total abstinence as the safe and only ground to stand upon. Resolutions were reported and adopted that our platform is the broad one of total abstinence from the manufacture, sale and use of all intoxicating drinks as a beverage; that one of the chief obstacles to overcome is the wholesale use of stimulants for the purpose of bribery and corruption by political partisans, and in the halls of legislation; invoking the aid of the minority of the Press, the medical profession and the influence of women in the cause; that the habitual use of intoxicating drinks is a serious if not absolute disqualification for stations of public responsibility, and that we regard it the duty of temperance men to use their influence in the primary meetings to secure the nomination of suitable rulers and legislators. Hon. FRANCIS GILLETTE offered a resolution that, as the chemical analysis of the different liquors at several of the first-class hotels and general saloons, made at the instance of the New-York World, disclose the appalling fact that the so-called liquors are the vilest adulterations, largely qualified with fusel oil—a virulent poison—the persistence in swallowing such drinks after their deadly nature has been exposed, is deliberate and reckless suicide, and thanking the World for the service it has rendered to humanity by exposing the vile stuff. The resolution was laid over. In the evening, speeches were made by Messrs. PERKINS, of New-Haven; DANA, of Norwich; BARNUM, of Bridgeport, BAILEY, of Waterbury, and others. The services throughout were largely attended.

A Negro Hanged by a Mob in Tennessee for Outraging a Woman.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Tuesday, Jan. 12.

Saturday night a negro named ABE YANDIMANE went to the house of WILLIAM SMITH, an employe of the Mississippi Central Railroad, at Water Valley, Miss., and after a desperate struggle succeeded in outraging the person of Mrs. SMITH, but not before he had strangled her little daughter until until she was insensible. As soon as it was daylight Mrs. SMITH alarmed the neighborhood.

The Marshal of the town started in pursuit of YANDIMANE, and succeeded in capturing him. On arriving in town with the prisoner, it was with the greatest difficulty the Marshal succeeded in keeping the negroes, who had assembled, from burning him. He was finally placed in jail for safe keeping. That night, however, the Ku-klux, in strong force, took him out and hung him. Yesterday morning, Mr. SMITH returned home. He became almost a maniac on hearing of affairs, and, taking a rifle, went to the place where the body was still hanging, and cut it down. He then gathered rails and built a fire upon the body. While the fire was burning, SMITH danced about it like a madman.

Detective BARNUM, of this city, on his return from a business trip to Pulaski, was taken from a train on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad to-day by a band of Ku-klux, twenty-five in number, with masks. What they did with BARNUM is not known.

The Damage by the Recent Freshet at Albany—The Sportsmen's Association.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

Nothing particularly noticeable has occurred in regard to the effect of the freshet on the pier. The water is gradually receding, but the current continues very strong. The several buildings north of the railroad ferry out yet standing are slowly settling, and, with one or two exceptions, will probably be wholly lost. Much of the movable property stored in them was saved to-day.

Portions of the rear walls of WASHBURN'S and TROWBRIDGE & CROMBIE'S large buildings have fallen, and the remaining portions keep crumbling away. The rear wall of TROWBRIDGE & CROMBIE'S four mills cracked this morning; but it is hoped, as the water is falling, that the damage will not be serious. Large quantities of grain were lost in the basin. Those interested estimate the total loss at not less than $125,000.

The State Sportsmen's Association met in this city to-day. Hon. BYRON ANGELL, of Wayne County, was made Chairman, and Col. WEBSTER, of Syracuse, Secretary. Resolutions were passed, recommending important changes in the existing Game laws. A committee, consisting of Hon. BYRON ANGELL, R. B. ROOSEVELT, R. M. SHEFFIELD, MORGAN SUTHERLAND, C. J. FOSGATE and J. A. LENTHERN, was appointed to prepare a bill in accordance with the recommendations of the Association for enactment through the Legislature. Also a bill incorporating the State Society of Sportsmen.

The Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad—Injunction Against the New Directors.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

Judges PARKER and FOOT to-day granted an injunction, at the instance of W. S. OTIS, attorney of the Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad Company, against the new Board of Directors, restraining them from operating or interfering with the road. The following notice will appear in the papers here to-morrow morning:

CLEVELAND AND PITTSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.

Sharpe, Esq., has this day been appointed Receiver of the said Company, and that the Directors, Executive Committee, Financial Agent and Treasurer of said Company have been enjoined from performing any official acts by the Court of Common Pleas of Cuyahoga County, Ohio.

Fatal Shooting Affray at Fort Henry, N. Y.

FORT HENRY, N. Y., Tuesday, Jan. 12.

DANIEL MCDONOUGH, a railroad boarding-house keeper, was shot and instantly killed in this place last evening by CHARLES H. FOOTE. McDONOUGH, with three others, all of whom were somewhat intoxicated, attempted to seize a horse and cutter to ride to their homes, distant about three miles, and benefited the owner, when FOOTE interfered to protect his friend, the owner of the horse and cutter. McDONOUGH then turned and assaulted FOOTE, who warned him to desist or he would shoot him. McDONOUGH, however, continued his demonstrations and was fired at by FOOTE, when he fell and almost instantly expired. FOOTE gave himself up to the authorities, and an examination is now being had. McDONOUGH leaves a wife and several small children.

The Maine Senatorial Question.

AUGUSTA, Me., Tuesday, Jan. 12.

The Senatorial question has assumed a new feature. Mr. PERRY, a member of the House, has declared in a card that he threw the black balls in the caucus intentionally. This leaves Mr. HAMLIN with a clean majority of the Republicans in the Legislature who desired to vote. Mr. MORRILL's friends now claim that Mr. HAMLIN was not declared nominated by the caucus, and therefore they are not bound to support him and intimate that they will not do so. A movement is on foot to bring forward a third man as a compromise candidate. Mr. HAMLIN's friends still claim that he was clearly the choice of a majority of his party, that he was fairly nominated, and if any member of his party refuses to vote for him he becomes a traitor.

Removal of Civil Officers in Georgia.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Tuesday, Jan. 12.

Removals from office, under the Fourteenth Amendment, continue with rapidity. About 100 have been removed within the last three weeks. ROBERT HOWARD, a clerk in the City Court, was removed to-day, and ANDREW WASHBURN appointed to the vacancy.

The Florida Legislature.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Tuesday, Jan. 12.

In the Senate to-day Mr. GAMBLE, a Northern negro, was elected Reading Clerk. A resolution offered by Mr. WALLS, (colored Republican,) requesting the Senate to call on Rome Commissioner Rousseau and attend to Senatorial duties, was tabled by the majority. A similar resolution, offered in the House by Mr. SCOTT, (colored,) was withdrawn. Senator CONOVER and Representative HASKINS left for Washington this afternoon. The party in favor of the impeachment of the Governor seems to be losing ground.

Opening of the Albany and Susquehanna Railroad—Interesting Ceremonies.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Tuesday, Jan. 12.

The Albany and Susquehanna Railroad was formally opened to-day. Five engines (some from Great Britain) had passed along the road, carrying between 4,000 and 5,000 representatives. The guests were received by great crowds at all the stations, and there was intense enthusiasm. President JOHNSON RAMSEY, with 200 or 300 invited guests, were on board of one of the trains. At the city they were formally received by the Citizens' Committee and escorted to Firemen's Hall, where a grand banquet was spread. About 600 sat down to the tables. Judge BALCOM presided and made a few remarks. Hon. GEORGE BARTLETT, Chairman of the Citizens' Committee, made the speech of welcome. President RAMSEY was called out, and gave a brief history of the road from the organization of the Company, and the subscription of a million dollars, namely, by the citizens along the line, in 1852, to the completion of it, in 1866, in spite of the veto of Governors. He was repeatedly applauded. JOHN H. MCFARLAND, one of the earliest advocates of the road, gave some reminiscences of the first meetings to subscribe for the stock held in 1851. He was followed by Col. SNOW, on behalf of Gov. HOFFMAN; by D. C. LITTLEJOHN, President of the Midland Railroad Company; by J. BARCROFT DAVIS, for the Erie Railway Company, and by others. Among the distinguished guests were Hon. LYMAN TRUMBLE, NATHAN LAPHAM and many members and ex-members of the Legislature. Almost every city in the State was represented, and nearly all the railroads. The excursionists not specially invited were entertained at a free lunch at the Court-house, and the affair was in all respects a marked success. Two trains went to Albany to-night. The others remain here until to-morrow, the excursionists being provided for at the hotels and residences of the citizens.

The Albany and Susquehanna Railroad is 140 miles long, and cost not far from $7,000,000, of which about $5,000,000 were obtained by private subscription and by bonding the Cities of Albany and Binghamton and the towns on the route. The road will be opened for business in a few days. It is the second road having its terminus at the city. There are also the Erie Road and a branch of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, four in all, directly connected with this city, while two others are prospected.

The Legislature of Alabama Declared to be Illegal.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Tuesday, Jan. 12.

The Columbiana Guide, a newspaper published at the county seat of Shelby County in this State, says: "Judge PELHAM, of the Circuit Court, on a case coming before him from the Probate Court of this county, decided that the present Legislature is an illegal body, and Gov. SMITH is an unlawful officer." Judge PELHAM is a prominent member of the Republican Party, and was elected to his office at the same time the Legislature and Governor were chosen.

ROBERT CREIGHTON, commanding the Royal Mail steamship Venezuelan, with the medal awarded him by Congress for gallantry in rescuing troops from the wrecked steamer San Francisco, in the bark Three Bells, some years ago. The presentation is to take place at Norfolk at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Newspaper Libel Suits in Chicago Ruled Out of Court.

CHICAGO, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

Four libel suits against the Tribune, for a total of $100,000 damages, were ruled out of the Superior Court yesterday. They were instituted by merchants, who claim the Tribune charged them with arson to avoid failure. They appeal to the Supreme Court.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Jan. 12.—New-York officers have brought either JOSEPH W. RICHARDSON, who is charged with obtaining money in various sums at different times, amounting to nearly $3,000, from JAMES MANSETT and HENRY WADE, of Dutchess County, under false pretences. His bail has been fixed at $3,000, in default of which he is still confined in jail, and it is stated to-day that he shows signs of insanity.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 12.—NELSON SPELLMAN was arrested in this town to-day for an attempted rape on Mrs. ELIZABETH GIBBONS, an estimable lady 55 years old, as she was going to church on Sunday. Mrs. GIBBONS was thrown down in the snow and seriously injured, but her screams frightened the villain away.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 12.—The Peruvian monitors, with their consorts, Havana and Monterey, left the mouth of the river this morning for the Pacific. They will touch at Pensacola.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Jan. 12.—It is thought the question of negro eligibility may be submitted to the Supreme Court for decision. Two Democratic papers suggest that this course be adopted by the Legislature. The Legislature meets to-morrow.

TAUNTON, N. Y., Jan. 12.—PHIL. HAZE, who was sentenced for life, eight years ago, for shooting a boy at New-Brunswick, and DANIEL BRANNIN, from Newark, escaped from the New-Jersey State Prison in time to take the owl train for New-York this morning. HAZE's father telegraphed the fact to the authorities here, and Chief KENNEDY, of New-York, telegraphed that he had made the arrest of BRANNIN, and both prisoners were returned to the prison this evening at 6 o'clock.

MATTOON, N. Y., Jan. 12.—At a meeting of the stockholders of the Buffalo, Corry and Pittsburg Railroad held here to-day, the following persons were elected Directors: Jay Gould, James Fisk, Jr., Frederick A. Lane, L. D. Becker, J. C. B. Davis, Thomas Struthers, Wm. H. Seward, Wm. H. Whiteside, John F. Phelps, Matthew P. Bemus, Daniel Williams, Amos E. Warren, George W. Gifford. Jay Gould was elected President, Thomas Struthers Vice President, and M. P. Bemus Secretary and Treasurer.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 12.—About 11:30 o'clock this evening a fire was discovered in the basement of the dry goods store of L. BURR, No. 76 State-street. The Fire Department was quickly on the ground and suppressed the flames before extensive damage had been done by fire. The loss by fire and smoke will doubtless amount to several thousand dollars. There is an insurance of about $70,000 on the stock and fixtures. The origin of the fire has not been ascertained.

NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATURE

Organization of the Two Branches—Message of Gov. Ward.

Both Houses of the New-Jersey Legislature met at 3 o'clock P. M. yesterday, and organized promptly by the election of the following officers agreed upon in Democratic caucus:

SENATE.—President—HENRY S. LITTLE, of Monmouth.

Secretary—JOSEPH B. CORNING, of Warren.

Assistant Secretary—JOHN VANDERVOORT, of Passaic.

Engrossing Clerk—JAMES H. DEVERY, of Cape May.

HOUSE.—Speaker—LEON ABBETT, of Hudson.

Clerk—ALEX. M. JOHNSTON, of Mercer.

Assistant Clerk—HORACE F. DRAKE, of Union.

Engrossing Clerk—SAMUEL HANNA, of Camden.

The Republican candidates were: For President of the Senate, EDWARD BETTLE, of Camden, and for Speaker of the House, THOMAS BERKLEY, of Cape May.

After the organization, the third annual message of Gov. MARCUS L. WARD was sent in and read.

The financial statement of the message shows that the expenditures of the year exceeded the receipts by about $80,000. The actual amount of the war debt of the State on the 1st of December last, was $3,122,419, a decrease of $99,500 during the past year. The amount received during the year from the General Government was $1,023 45, making the total amount paid to the State by the General Government, $1,626,467.

The school fund shows receipts during the year of $128,076 69, and a balance left of that of over $10,000. The Governor dwells especially upon the subject of education and the importance of giving increased efficiency to the public school system, and suggests that a part of the money received from the sales of the lands under water be added to this fund. The total expenditures for common schools from money derived from local taxes, footed up $1,149,143 26.

The various educational institutions of the State, the Agricultural College, the State Library, the Normal and Farmers' Schools, are reported in good condition. The State Prison under which Reform School is conducted is severely criticised. The reformatory institutions, especially the State Reform School, are warmly commended.

The Governor ably discusses the claims of the State to lands under water, and points to them as a source of wealth which ought to pay the debt of the State, besides establishing a noble school fund. He insists strongly that there shall be no further surrender of State rights other than for value received.

In the military department, Gov. WARD reports the Soldiers' Claim Agency as discontinued, nearly all claims having been adjusted and paid.

He asks Congressional aid to prevent the inroads of the ocean upon the shores of New-Jersey, and to open channels which have been filled up, and also bills for the establishment of a Secretary and Bureau of Agriculture.

ALBANY.

Reassembling of the Legislature—The Senatorial Contest—The Prospects of the Rival Candidates.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Jan. 12.

The reassembling of the Legislature to-morrow has brought most of the members and lobbyists back here, and the Senatorial canvass is renewed with increased vigor. PERTON's friends talk more confidently than ever, and profess to have a majority already secured by actual count. The Morgan men are not at all disheartened, however, by the assurance of their opponents, and claim to have better grounds for their faith. The Troy Times this evening urges GRAVESOLD as a compromise point candidate, but it is very doubtful if he can be reached now, even if he is disposed to consider the proposition, and with the votes counted nearly as to the result.

SPEAKER MORGAN will not announce the Committees to-morrow, as some anticipate, but, it is said, will wait till after the Senatorial caucus, which will not be held till Saturday, perhaps not till Monday next. Congressmen LAPLIN and KELSEY are here, said to be in the interest of MORGAN. PETER B. SWEENY, the Tammany King, is also here, and the influence of the Democracy, such as it is, all goes for PERTON. The reason given is that if it had not been for MORGAN's money, used in the Assembly Districts during the campaign, the Democrats would have a majority in the present Legislature.

The Senatorial Question—Hon. John A. Griswold.

From the Troy Times, Jan. 12.

Immediately after the recent election, Mr. GRISWOLD's name was mentioned by prominent journals and influential Republicans in connection with the United States Senatorship. He was unwilling to enter into a contest for the position; he had just come out of a bitter canvass, having accepted the nomination for Governor against his personal inclinations and only in response to a strongly developed popular sentiment, and he could not consent to undertake a canvass in another field for another office, whereby his motives might be misinterpreted, and to some extent at least the generous sympathies of friends who had so lately supported him with hearty enthusiasm would become alienated. Occupying this honorable ground, his friends here and elsewhere have believed that in the unbiased condition of the Senatorship now going on at Albany, a contingency might happen wherein Mr. GRISWOLD's name could properly be used by the Republican members of the Legislature for the security of party harmony, and with the certainty, too, that his election as United States Senator would insure for New-York a representative in the Senate of the highest character and of undoubted qualifications for the honorable and dignified position. Is he not really acceptable to all? Would not his election heal the feuds of faction, satisfy the claims of integrity, and prove poetic justice as against the party of fraud which swindled the people out of the honest vote by cheating him of the election which they decreed by their ballots? Not that Mr. GRISWOLD is a candidate for Senator, nor has he been a candidate in the sense in which candidacy is usually accepted. In other words he has declined to make or authorize a contest in behalf of himself as against others. Yet this very fact renders him entirely free from entangling alliances, and all the more suitable for selection upon the basis of conciliation and compromise.

THE TURF.

The Jerome Park Spring Meeting—Changes in Racing Stables—Retirement of Kentucky from the Turf.

The American Jockey Club have issued their programme of racing sport for the forthcoming Spring meeting at Jerome Park, which commences on Saturday, June 5, and continues over four days, held alternately. Nineteen races will be run during the meeting, of which two only are heat races, of mile and two miles; this class of events, although formerly a distinguishing and highly popular feature of the American turf, not now finding much favor with the American Jockey Club and owners of race horses. The sport on the opening day comprises a hurdle race; a handicap of a mile and a quarter, called the Fordham Stakes; the Belmont Stakes for three-year olds, a mile and five furlongs, which has thirty-seven nominations; and the Members' Cup, a dash of a mile and an eighth, for gentlemen riders only. The entries for the Fordham stakes close on March 1; for the Members' Cup, on May 20. Among the entries for the Belmont Stakes we find several that have distinguished themselves by their running at two-year olds, such as Mr. JEROME's ch. c. Leonardo, (now called Kenton, and owned by Mr. BELMONT,) and b. f. Rapture; Mr. SANFORD's ch. f. The Nun and b. f. The Mona; Mr. HUNTER's b. f. Mortarice and b. c. Sapphire; Mr. CARMAN's imported fillies Interrogatoire, Intercourse and Interness, and Col. MCDANIELS' b. f. Oakleaf. Last year this rich stake was won by Gen. DUKE, but this season the race is or a more open character than on that occasion.

On the second day a mile heat race, the entries for which are made the day previous, commences the sport. Then comes the Westchester Cup, value $1,500, a dash of two miles and a quarter, which usually produces one of the most interesting races of the meeting, and will no doubt this year fully maintain its previous prestige; the entries for this close on the 1 March. A selling race of a mile and three quarters, and a three-year-old race, one mile and an eighth, with a ten-pounds penalty for the winner of the Belmont stakes, constitute the remainder of this day's amusement. On the third day the Hopeful Stakes, for two-year olds, a short dash of five furlongs, opens the ball; the entries closing March 1. Last year Col. MCDANIELS' chart daughter of Balloonist, Remote Lass, commenced her brilliant career on this course by winning this stake in a canter from a field of eight opponents, and followed up her success by fairly running away from the large field opposed to her in the two-year old sweepstakes on the last day, despite the seven pounds penalty she had to carry. The Ladies' Stake, a sweepstakes for three-year old fillies—one mile and five furlongs—is the second race, and for it having closed in 1867. The Metropolitan Stakes is a race of two-mile heats, the only one of the meeting, and closes on April 1. A selling race of a mile and a quarter finishes this day's sport.

On the fourth and last day of the meeting, a hurdle race commences the proceedings, followed by the Jockey Club Handicap for all ages, two miles, for which the entries close March 1. A purse for beaten horses, dash of a mile and three quarters, and one of $1,000 for all ages, dash of three miles, follow. In addition to the above races, there are three sweepstakes for two-year olds, $200 each, without any added money, and all dashes of five furlongs, to be run for on the first, second and last days of the meeting respectively. Altogether the programme is a judiciously arranged and liberal one, although we should have been more gratified to have seen more first race included in it, and fewer of those short, scambling sweepstakes which appear to do nothing only except cultivate and improve the stamina and stoutness of our race-horses. The amount of added money to the various purses and stakes given by the Jockey Club is $12,750, a sum which speaks highly for its liberality.

Several changes have taken place in many of the principal training establishments since last season. Mr. A. J. MINOR, who stands at the head of his profession as a skillful, intelligent and successful trainer, has severed his connection with the Holmdell stable, and will this season train for Mr. JOHN HYMAN, whose string of thoroughbreds will be located at the Centreville Course, Long Island. WILLIAM BROWN, a careful and able man, succeeds Mr. MINOR at Holmdell, and the young Hedges stock of Mr. FRANCIS MORGAN will in future be trained under his supervision. DAVID MCCOUPSEY removed his public training stable from Madison, N. J., to Jerome Park, where he will this season be ready to take in thoroughbreds and prepare them for their engagements. JACOB PIDGEN, a young man very successful and careful trainer, has given up public training, and is now engaged in private trainer for Mr. Avenue Belmont, at his breeding establishment in The Meadows, near Babylon, L. I. Young WALTERS has been engaged as private trainer for Mr. J. PUNNAN'S stable at Jerome Park. Mr. T. PUNNAN will superintend the powerful stable of the new racing confederacy, Messrs. DENNISON and CRAWFURD, and will train at Paterson, N. J., where GRAHAM LITTLEJOHN has commenced operations in public training, as well as in his own account. Mr. SANFORD'S horses can be presented in charge of his clever jockey, HAYNAN, whose splendid horsemanship on Kentucky carried the Stockton cup to Pennsylvania. Mr. CARMAN has not yet retained a regular trainer for his extensive stable of imported thoroughbreds, and, indeed, it is rumored that he will not train any more, but devote his attention to his extensively supported breeding establishment at Clifton Park. Mr. SANFORD has been South with Mr. PENNOYER'S stable, and has made Mobile his training quarters for the Winter, in company with Messrs. MOORE and COZZENS's powerful string of racers.

The celebrated racehorses Kentucky has been finally withdrawn from the turf, and will, in future, be devoted to the stud. His racing career has been a brilliant and glorious one, unsurpassed by any in the annals of the American turf. He never met with defeat except on one occasion, when he was started when notoriously stale, and against the counsel of his trainer, and he won in purses and stakes close upon $40,000. He was bred by Mr. JOHN M. CLAY, of Kentucky, and was by Lexington out of Magnolia, by Glencoe. His first appearance on the turf was as a two-year old at Paterson, in the Fall of 1864, when he won a sweepstakes in much grand style, that Messrs. TRAVIS and CRAVEN purchased him along with Arcologist $7,000. He remained their property, although running in the name and under the training of Mr. JOHN HUNTER, throughout his glorious racing career, until the Spring of 1867, when Mr. LEONARD W. JEROME purchased him for the alleged price of $40,000. It was while in this gentleman's possession he ran his great match against time for $10,000, which he lost by a little more than a year of ability; but the bad management of those who controlled him and made the match. Soon afterward he was purchased by the racing confederacy known as the "Annieswold Stable," but going amiss while in their hands, he was not able to stand in public. As the disruption and consequent public sale of the stock owned by the Annieswold ring, Kentucky was brought by Mr. JEROME, for $15,000, after a spirited competition for his possession with Mr. HUNTER. Mr. JEROME has now put him to the stud, and he will in future be located at that gentleman's breeding establishment near Babylon, L. I. In the Spring of 1867 he was put to the stud for a short season, and his stock are so fine and promising that we may safely anticipate for him, as a sire, a career equally as glorious as it was as a racer.

Mr. CHARLES WEBSTER, who has, since the organization of the American Jockey Club, officiated as Clerk of the Course at Jerome Park, has been appointed to the position of Secretary to the Club, vice Dr. JOHN IRVING, resigned. The withdrawal from the Secretaryship of Dr. IRVING is much regretted by his numerous racing friends, whose good will in that position he has gained by his unvarying courtesy and gentlemanly conduct. In Mr. WEBSTER the Jockey Club have secured an invaluable official.

The following is a brief note from Gen. BUTLER to a resident of Louisiana:

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12, 1868.

MY DEAR PERKIN: I cannot agree to FELLOWS' proposition to restrict suffrage to "the free-born." The Chief Captain said unto Paul: "With a great price had I this freedom"—the great price the slaves have paid cannot in this way be answered.

Yours, truly, BENJ. F. BUTLER.

The Pittsburg Commercial says that the Louisville Courier-Journal's sensational story about a great subterranean conflagration at the mouth of the Youghiogheny River has but slight foundation, the fire having been burning slowly for years without inflicting any loss.

A Boston gentleman, a few days ago, dined with a club, and invited its members to dine with him on Tuesday. At the time appointed they assembled at his house—not to a dinner party, but to attend his funeral.

The message of Gov. BAKER, of Indiana, is about fourteen columns in length, and the Cincinnati Commercial says that with a little arrangement and classification it would pass for an encyclopedia.

Some portions of New-Jersey seem to be suffering from an invasion by a small army of quack doctors, and the Hudson County Medical Society has proposed a bill, which it will present to the Legislature, forbidding any person to practice medicine in this county unless he be an authorized practitioner. It is also proposed to lay a heavy fine on those who pretend to dispense drugs without a proper training.

Kings County Republican General Committee—Exciting Meeting.

In accordance with the announcement duly made, the delegates from the various ward and town organizations to the Kings County Republican General Committee met at the headquarters, in Washington-street, last evening, for the purpose of organizing for the year. Chairman A. P. THEUNIS was elected temporary Chairman. Col. AUCHMUTY and COZZENS SMITH were elected temporary Secretaries. Upon the reading of the names of delegates, it appeared that there were two sets from the First, Twelfth, Fifteenth and Eighteenth Wards. Mr. MADDOX, amid much disorder, moved that the Committee should hear each side in turn. This did not appear to meet the views of a large portion of the delegates, and there was much confusion in consequence, every body desiring to speak. The MOTION was put and carried. Mr. MADDOX then moved to lay the subject of contested seats on the table, and the motion was adopted. He then moved that the Committee go into election of officers for 1869. The opposition objected to this, and a warm discussion followed, in the course of which there was considerable personal feeling evinced, and it was charged that the movements of Mr. MADDOX indicated a desire to be one-sided and unfair. Pending this excited scene a motion to adjourn was offered, and the Chairman declared the meeting adjourned. The friends of Mr. CHARLES GODMAN then left the Hall. At this point a delegate jumped on the platform and moved that Mr. GEORGE P. WILLET take the chair. This being carried, Mr. MADDOX's friends proceeded to organize a General Committee, and at a late hour ELIAS B. DURYEE was elected permanent Chairman of the Committee by 57 votes. The entire delegation includes 135 members. Messrs. CRESSINE and NORTON were elected Recording Secretaries, Mr. WHEELER was elected Corresponding Secretary, and Mr. F. W. KEENER, Treasurer. The meeting was still in session at a late hour.

CONGRESS.

[illegible] in the public debt of the United States, upon [illegible] at their early day, the public credit of the United States, at home, at the Treasury of the United States.

Another proposition which will come up, and which [illegible] is, that the notes were to be made payable in all specie [illegible] to the United States, thus giving its bills the [illegible] which they have. Another proposition [illegible] deserving attention, [illegible] that the whole issue $10,000,000 of circulation. It was to pay back interest $400,000, as [illegible] paid in gold and silver of its capital, [illegible] on, thus establishing the principle that the [illegible] which circulated as money, were [illegible] into gold and silver. But for the operations the United States were not to be [illegible] to the extent of one-fifth of the stock in the [illegible] becomes a subscriber. Notwithstanding the prohibition of the Constitution, that no State should issue bills of credit, the necessities of the people [illegible] to develop the resources of the country [illegible] controlling that every State established banks [illegible] bills which should circulate as money, [illegible] of which was nominally one-fourth [illegible] Right in which I show my view of the establishment of State banks, they would [illegible] within the inhibition of the Constitution, [illegible] it is only a patent evasion to allow the [illegible] to establish bodies corporate, in which [illegible] sovereignty per owners, to do that which the Constitution prohibited the States themselves [illegible] Then the creature might and did do what was prohibited to the creator. Now is it surprising that this State legislation, when executed by the Courts, was held within the Constitution, because the [illegible] convenience and necessity of the whole people [illegible] have, as they always will, test bold the Constitutional provisions of the United States [illegible] and less? has ever been, as it ever should be, the interpreter and complement of the Constitution. The United States Bank failing to be rechartered in 1811, the country remained without any uniform currency, although gold and silver were standards of value, until 1817, when another Bank of the United States was established, with a much enlarged capital, for a period of twenty years, and the original [illegible] to expire, a few days after the date being fixed by the veto of President Jackson.

It will not be useful further to advert to the history of the Bank of the United States, and the attention to the independent Treasury act of July 4, 1840, among the provisions of which it was enacted that all debts due to or from the United States were to be paid and collected in gold and silver, so that the currency in which the Government transacted its business was truly special. This practice, as is well known, continued until the war of the rebellion, and the Legal-tender act of Feb. 25, 1862. But during all this time the currency of the people was paper issued by the banks, secured by various legislative devices. The actual security for the immediate redemption of this paper was nominally one-fourth gold and silver coin, supposed to be in the bank, but in fact about one-third, and its credit rested upon the actual value of the notes and bills of their customers, discounted by the banks on longer or shorter time, or what is technically known as the "bank portfolio." As all these bank notes circulated as money purporting to be redeemable in specie on demand, as well as the deposits, which much exceeded the specie in the banks, and as the banks held in their [illegible] a small proportion in coin, it is obvious that these promises could not be so redeemed, so that whenever the exigencies of the business of the country or of the world called for any large sum the banks either refused to pay specie on, by contracting their circulation, so diminished the money of the country as to bring the prices within a limit at which the circulation, being a necessity to the people, would not come in for redemption. It will be readily seen that the fluctuations in the amount and value of the currency, caused by the banks being obliged to contract to meet every considerable demand in specie, were as all subversive of all stability in business enterprises, if not to commercial integrity itself, since once in every ten years, and a large part of the time much oftener, the banks were obliged to refuse to redeem their notes in specie, and, from the necessity of the case, were supported in so doing by legal enactment. No mercantile capacity is in business, no forethought or prudence in investment, no integrity of purpose, and no solidity of capital in the merchant or conductor of business enterprises, public or private, under such a financial system of pretended convertibility could or did prevent commercial failures and ruin. Every few years panics ensued, and whole classes of merchants, manufacturers, and others were involved in ruin from causes which it was impossible for them to foresee or control. The whole property of the country, the scanty provisions for the widow and orphan, the stocks in otherwise prosperous enterprises, the chances of public works conducted on the develop the industry and wealth of the country, each and all alike, at uncertain and irregular periods, fluctuated in price quite one-half. If this condition of things had been dependent upon the habits of our people, upon the productiveness or non-productiveness of our industries, the profitableness or unprofitableness of our commerce or business, or upon any action of the government of any of our Legislatures, either State or National, one or all, perhaps some remedy might have been found or method of alleviation proposed. But none of these had any effect to hasten or retard these fluctuations of commercial values. The fault was inherent in our financial system, which was, and, while based on convertible paper, must ever continue to be, but an exaggerated offshoot of the financial systems of Europe, subject to the changes, the needs, the wars, famines and distresses of other countries. It was in no sense an American system, nor by any of its details adapted to the institutions of a free, enterprising and independent people. Long and varied were the expedients resorted to by the General Government to remedy this chronic vacillation of money, to the destruction of the business interests of the country. But all in vain. In the endeavor to do this the United States, as we shall see, at first chartered a Bank, and became a subscriber to its stock, and received and paid out its bills as money for a period of twenty years. Still the erratic but inevitable periods of commercial distress came round. Again it refused to have anything to do with a bank, and left money to the natural laws of trade for five years. Again, to first, still financial distress ensued, and went in turn like the vibrations of the pendulum, but wanting their regularity. In 1816 the Government again tried the experiment of making an unfluctuating convertible currency, by chartering a bank of more than three times the capital of the old one as a regulator of the currency. Still the oscillation went on more unmoored and subversive than ever. The years of 1837-38 will ever be memorable in the history of the country for the wholesale destruction of fortunes and commercial values. The bank charter expired in 1836 by its own limitation, and the Government again divorced itself from all connection with the financial system of the country. It have to suppose a convertible paper to be its own work uncontrolled save by its own laws, but the financial distresses and convulsions of 1837 caused all previous ones for the time to be forgotten. In the endeavor to find some relief by legislation, political parties were broken up, and the election of 1840 turned upon the distresses in business of the country alone, but change of administration brought no relief. The Government established its own affairs firmly on a specie basis in 1840, holding aloof from any interference with the finances of the country, hoping to give them stability by the regularity and steadiness of its receipts and payments in specie, although sometimes issuing Treasury notes like exchequer bills, or buying in its own bonds in order to deplete its depositories of gold as a measure of relief to commerce and business. Still the periodical visitations of commercial disaster and ruin continued, and the years of the panics of 1840 and 1857 quite paralleled those of 1837 and 1837 as parts of financial disaster.

It will not be very useful further to trace the commercial history of the country, but with the experience of seventy years of such fluctuations of value, of commercial ruin and distress, from which the country cannot be relieved either by the sagacity of its financiers and merchants, the wisdom of its legislators, or the industry and enterprise of its citizens, let me pause here and ask, the country being now, partially at least, emancipated from a financial system producing such results, is it desirable voluntarily to return to it? Specially, ought we to return to it when distress upon the people in order so to do? It is needless for me to add that amid all these convulsions and revulsions of the business of the country and its currency and the destruction of its values, the losses fell at last, as they ever most fall, upon the laboring masses. Bread riots were not unfrequent; productive industry was paralyzed; the work shops and mills were closed, leaving labor unemployed and unpaid; its value then lost never is regained by a rise in prices or a return to prosperity; for it is the peculiarity of labor, says an eminent economist, "that it is the only commodity that perishes at the instant of production, and if not then put to use is lost forever." Such are the results experience, during the lifetime of the Government, shows have always followed the attempt to conduct the business of the country upon specie payments, or, in other words, with a circulating medium supposed to be always convertible, but which never can be converted into gold and silver.

Let us now examine and see if we may know why, with our currency upon a supposed basis of convertibility, experience has shown that it is apparently beyond human power to regulate or control, or sustain the business or finances of the country. Is it not because in adopting the specie measure of value and instrument of exchange we have bound our business and finances hand and foot to the monarchs and bankers of Europe? We have adopted their standard of value, which they control at their will, for their purposes and for their necessity and not for ours. Whenever from caprice or malignity or pique or war or attempt to unsettle or restore the balance of power among the Governments of Europe they have seen fit to lower or raise their price for gold, then, our currency, based thereon, but expanded as four to one, feels the shock in quadruple proportion. May, more, having silver and gold both as standards of value, whenever the caprice of some Indian prince or Chinese mandarin chooses to call for silver in payment of the commodities we can say none nation imports from the East and thereby raises it to a premium in comparison with gold, then we say gold and silver go out, not at the value fixed by us as coin, but at the value at which they are taken, simply as bullion. Gold is still further depressed in value in comparison with silver, which is the sole standard of the principal commercial countries of Europe; and in consequence of this, very rapidly do Europe to fill the vacuum caused by the enormous importation of silver to China, Japan and India. The extent of the drain upon the silver of Europe and the necessary rise in price as compared with gold, and the consequent necessary flow of gold from those countries where it is fixed value as compared with silver, like England and Holland, where, since gold is the standard of value, may be seen from data derived from the books of the Oriental Bank Exchange Company, through whose agency alone, the year of 1859, $60,000,000 were transported to Asia from Europe, and in 1858, and 1857 in the following years in $60,000,000 each, and the year 1856, $40,000,000 out of Europe, we have $100,000,000 in a [illegible] office in China only, from [illegible] to the East, in a single year, or more than double the annual product of all the silver mines in Europe and America. In 1857 there must be added quite one-fourth to the amount of the circulation of 1856. It will be observed that half of this issue of silver must be taken from the circulation of Europe, say $50,000,000, and the place [illegible] with gold; and both in consequence of the Bank-rate independent of their will and directly [illegible] the Bank of England, the most [illegible] in the world, and exclusively [illegible] the Bank of England in the [illegible] of gold. The Bank of England, although the lowest her rate of discount eight times during the year 1858, and nine times in 1857, quadrupling it in amount and ending in final bankruptcy and suspension in November of that year. I have taken this period for comparison, as it was before our war of rebellion and the cotton dearth, which so much affected the finances of England. This great drain still goes on. Is it wise, therefore, by legislative enactment to enforce a return to a currency by which all our values are to be measured, our productions exchanged and transported, our wealth to be distributed and our industries to be governed, the very basis of which is controlled and fluctuated not only by the interests and commerce of the Christian and civilized world, but by the trade and needs of the half-civilized and barbarous nations of the East. Instead of this money, the instrument of tyranny, which has wrought all these evils, I propose a paper currency, furnishing the cheapest and most convenient, its value based not only upon the gold in the country, but upon every other source and element of the national property, emancipated from the control of all other nations, whether civilized or barbarous. It is the currency for a people, large enough to maintain, and, if need be, to defend its rights against the world, whose Governments they have antagonized; strong enough to sustain the measure of their business transactions with each other independent of kings, the least, or bankers, now the most potent sovereigns in the world. It is one of the blessings of the war that we are enabled, for the first time, to stand alone in our industrial and internal commerce as we have in our institutions.

It cannot fail to have attracted attention that the only remedy for all evils brought on by the currency convertible into specie when distress is upon the merchant, ruin upon the manufacturer, and disaster upon the banker, when the banks of the United States, of England, and of France could afford no aid, has always been a suspension of specie payments, i. e., by the use in these the foremost nations of the world of an inconvertible paper currency. If such currency be so potent as a remedy for all financial diseases which beset a nation, either in peace or war, whether arising from over-trading, over-speculation, or over-investment, why may it not be equally beneficial as a fixed, permanent, and stable circulating medium to supply the demands of business and the necessities of the people? The experiment of an inconvertible currency has been tried on the most extended scale and through long periods of time and under the most trying circumstances, and has never failed. In 1797, when the British Empire was threatened with rebellion in Ireland, and was sustaining all Europe against the victories of Bonaparte with its armies of gold, the question came to her great War Minister, Pitt, Shall the integrity of the Empire be lost? Shall France overrun all Europe and threaten Great Britain in the East, or shall the currency of the Empire be the inconvertible note of the Bank of England? He chose the latter. How wisely, let the success of England and the allied arms, culminating at Waterloo, attest. An inconvertible currency fought the battles of England and of the world from that Sunday morning, the 26th of February, 1797, when the King himself, in council, ordered the suspension of specie payments, till the 18th of June, 1815. Irredeemable paper laid the foundation of England's greatness and condition of her national property, supplied her navy, which, at Trafalgar, made her the mistress of the seas, and procured the gold with which all the armies of Europe were paid, and for eighteen years there was neither financial revulsion, business panic nor distress. In answer to the objection that it is necessary to have gold currency for foreign trade I quote Macpherson, one of the most philosophical as well as accurate writers of England, in his History of the Currency:

"It is remarkable that no difficulty was experienced by our merchants in carrying on their trade with other nations during this period, though they no longer had access to specie, and though the Bank of England, of which they might adjust their foreign payments. No inconvenience, indeed, of any kind was felt from the substitution of paper for gold, and if the best direct evidence be taken, namely, the uniformity and market price of gold on an equality, it seems that no objection could have been urged against the paper currency, on account of its quality to foreigners, and we never should have heard of the currency controversy."

We remember our own war of the rebellion, without the legal-tender note, must have come to an end in the beginning of 1862; the banks had suspended, and, like broken reeds, the Government could no longer lean upon them; business was paralyzed; men and supplies could hardly be obtained, the armies were unpaid, and our country's battle had been fought when Congress passed the legal-tender act of 1862. From that time business received a new impulse, labor was employed, manufactures everywhere sprung up, supplies were abundant, and although by a great error the Legal-tender note was not made the money of the Government for all purposes, yet it enabled her to pay, if crippled as it was, its supplies and paid our soldiers, pensioned the wounded, provided for the widow and orphan, and produced a degree of prosperity heretofore unknown, which has been maintained ever since, and during this period of six years financial panics and disasters were unknown and unthought of, until the insane attempt of the banker and capitalist to force a return to specie payments by a contraction of the currency. During the year 1864 we exported more than one hundred millions of gold and silver, only $39,506,000 of which came from San Francisco, and no one knew the fact from any effect it had on the business of the country. It is not any other year, while our currency was upon a specie basis, the amount of gold put of that sum beyond our production would have produced financial panics, ruin, and distress greater than that of 1837, when our total export of specie was less than six million dollars. Point me to any other six years in the financial history of the country, in which the labor has been so well paid; for which there have not been more than one financial panic scattering ruin and disaster through the land. We have heard much of the patriotism of the bankers and capitalists who are said to have come forward to lend their gold to the country in its time of utmost need, but that is exactly what they did not do.

In December, 1861, the banks suspended specie payments without right, without authority of law, in violation of their own plighted faith and promises, and refused to pay the Government nor any one else could get a dollar of their gold from their vaults. When, in pursuance of the act of Congress of the 26th of February, 1862, $150,000,000 of legal-tender notes were issued, with which our soldiers were paid and the debts of the United States collected, did the banks or capitalists loan these to the Government or did we make them for ourselves? On the contrary, the banks refused even to receive the Government notes on deposit. When the Government wanted more money to pay the soldier and carry on the war, did they get it from the banker and capitalist? No; they issued their own legal-tender notes as money and paid their debts. Having provided that these notes should be funded in a gold-bearing six per cent. bond, the capitalists bought them up when they fell to a discount of sixty per cent., by selling the gold at that premium which they had hoarded in their vaults and had refused to loan to the Government, and funded this, which cost them only sixty cents in gold, at its face value, in gold, or, what they now call fair money, in the return to specie payments, they now howl at the down of the Capitol, unmindful of the destruction of value, the starving of the laborer, and the ruin and devastation they may cause. Although this return to specie payment has been agitated ever since the war, what agitation has come to you from the people demanding it at your hands? What petitions of the people have been had to make to you petitions for relief from grievances in this behalf? Not one; not one. Only resolutions of Boards of Trade and bankers. I stand here, therefore, for inconvertible paper money, the greenback, which has brought our nation through a war for our country, which has been held by us a just equivalent for the blood of our soldiers, the lives of our sons, the widowhood of our daughters, and the orphanage of their children. I stand here for a currency by which the business transactions of forty million people are safely and successfully done, which, founded on the faith, the wealth and property of the nation, is at once the exemplar and engine of its industry and power—that money which saved the country in war, and has given it prosperity and happiness in peace. To it four-million men owe their emancipation from slavery; to it labor is indebted for elevation from that thrall of degradation in which it has been enveloped for ages. I stand for that money, therefore, which is by far the better agent and instrument of exchange of an enlightened and free people than gold and silver, the money alike of the barbarian and the despot.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, Mr. BUFFLER's motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

WAR DEPARTMENT CLAIMS.

Mr. SPALDING, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a resolution that all the papers and evidence returned to the War Department by the Davis-Holt-and-Campbell Commission touching claims of the Department of the West before the 14th of October, 1861, shall be surrendered and turned over to the Attorney-General, whose duty it shall be to cause the evidence to be examined, and such as have a bearing on the Court of Claims shall be printed and received by said Court, subject, however, to examination or rebuttal of the witnesses of either party. Mr. SPALDING said the Committee had unanimously instructed him to offer the resolution and ask its passage at this time. He explained that these claims were adjudicated by a Commission appointed under an act of Congress. One of them was a Justice of the Supreme Court, another JOSEPH HOLT, the head of the Bureau of Military Justice, and the third an eminent merchant of St. Louis. The Commission carefully examined these claims, and directed so much of them to be paid as they deemed just and equitable. The claimants now ask to receive their money and give their receipts in full; but now, considering it at night appear, they bring suit in the Court of Claims, and ask for the difference between what was originally claimed and what they said they ought to have in satisfaction of their claims. The claimants say they gave their receipts under duress, and therefore they are not bound by them.

In reply to a question asked by Mr. SCHENCK, he said the evidence was not conclusive, but was to be taken by the Court for what it was worth.

The resolution was passed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT PRINTING.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, it was resolved that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the House a copy of the report made under the direction of the First Comptroller, the First Auditor and Registrar of the Treasury, in response to the past and present condition of the general and [illegible] printing of the Treasury Department with the accompanying documents.

DEMURRAGE FROM WRONGED TIMBER.

Mr. DAWES, Chairman of the Committee on Elections, presented the certificate of J. M. CAMPBELL of delegate from the Territory of Wyoming.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, inquired how the gentleman was elected.

Mr. DAWES replied that Mr. CAMPBELL was sent here to act as delegate or envoy, in accordance with precedent and custom, but not in accordance with any form of law.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, said that although a bill organizing the Territory of Wyoming was passed last session, the officers had not yet been appointed. He asked who then there had been an election since the Territory was organized.

Mr. DAWES—Certainly not.

Mr. WASHBURNE—Then I object to the admission of the delegate.

The Speaker said that was for the House to determine.

Mr. DAWES, in reply, adverted to the fact that other delegates and members had been admitted, notwithstanding they were elected before the organization of their respective States or Territories, in the absence of provision by law. Mr. CAMPBELL was simply the agent of the Territory of Wyoming.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois—Is he the agent of the Territory or of the Union Pacific Railroad Company?

Mr. DAWES—I have no facts beyond what I have stated.

Mr. WASHBURNE—I want to know how many votes he received, and who signed the certificate of election.

Mr. DAWES—I have no knowledge of how many votes he received.

The certificate was read, showing the election was called by a mass meeting, and that Mr. CAMPBELL was elected by a majority of all votes. It was signed by the Committee of Elections.

After further debate, on motion of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, the certificate was referred to the Committee on Elections to report on the case.

THE ORDNANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. SCHENCK remarked that some Senators and Representatives thought that it required a joint resolution to continue the Committee on Ordnance. He, therefore, asked that the Senate resolution on the table be taken up and passed. Two or three important witnesses were yet to be examined on heavy ordnance.

The House concurred in the Senate resolution.

The Speaker responded, in their capacity, as the Committee on the part of the House, those who had heretofore served.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee of the Judiciary, made report to the effect that the Committee in March, 1859, were directed to examine the memorial of EDWARD LAMBERT, with reference to the Union Pacific Railroad, Eastern Division. The conclusion of the Committee was embodied in the resolutions unanimously adopted by them on the 21st of May, 1859. They had heard the parties and examined the pertinent evidence, and of the opinion that the lien of the United States on said road should be affected by alleged irregularities or illegal proceedings of the Company engaged in the construction of the same. The question raised by the memorialists was for the action of the Court and not for the Committee.

The report was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on Reconstruction, reported a bill to relieve the political disabilities of WILLIAM H. BAGLEY, of Wake County, N. C., and it was passed by the requisite two-thirds vote.

LEGISLATIVE AND EXECUTIVE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation bill which was made the special order for to-morrow, after the morning hour.

THE INAUGURATION BALL.

Mr. GOODE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a concurrent resolution, which was passed, giving the use of the Rotunda and old Hall of Representatives, together with other parts of the Capitol for the purposes of the inauguration ball.

GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, introduced a bill, providing a temporary Government for Alaska. Also a bill in relation to the election of delegates from the Territories. Which were referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

The House resumed consideration of the bill to equalize bounties to officers and soldiers and seamen who served in the late war for the Union.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Indiana, made a speech in support of the bill, in the course of which he said $50,000,000 would more than cover the amount required for the payments.

On his motion, the bill was recommitted, when he moved to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to lay the motion on the table, which was disagreed to by a vote of yeas 46 to nays 61.

The further consideration of the motion was then postponed for three weeks from to-day.

CLAIMS AGAINST RUSSIA.

Mr. BANKS, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a resolution, which was agreed to, that the President of the United States be requested to use his good offices for the purpose of obtaining from the Russian Government prompt and just consideration of the claims of BENJ. W. PERKINS and others, arising under contracts with citizens of the United States.

A PROTECTORATE FOR HAYTI AND SAN DOMINGO.

Mr. BANKS reported the joint resolution, already published in the newspapers, proposing the protection of Hayti and San Domingo by the United States. He said that this subject had been brought to our attention very recently, and that the resolution was based upon the idea that the Government desired the action recommended. He was not, however, authorized officially to state the fact, but mentioned it on his own responsibility, predicated on the best information which he could obtain. He had presented the subject to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. There was not time for full consideration. It was a novel question and of importance, but he received the unanimous authority of the Committee to make the report.

Mr. MULLINS inquired whether, by pursuing the course recommended, they were not running the hazard of interfering with foreign Governments.

Mr. BANKS replied—In no respect whatever. No European power has the slightest claim on the Island of San Domingo, and the resolution did not contemplate intervention in the slightest degree. It was only for the purpose of assisting Hayti and San Domingo to maintain their own institutions.

Mr. DUNCAN asked the gentleman from Massachusetts to inform the House what would be the future ability by virtue of the proposed protectorate of our new relations.

Mr. BANKS replied that the resolution did not contemplate a protectorate in the European sense. It might require nothing more than the sending thither of a vessel of war, and in case of the interruption of the tranquillity of Hayti, either the parties attempting revolution that they had better wait till the regular period of election occurred. He was satisfied that this would be sufficient to secure the object of the resolution.

Mr. WOODWARD inquired, whether this was not initiating steps for entering alliances against which the Father of this Country warned us?

Mr. BANKS replied that it was not initiating steps, excepting to secure good government. All the European Powers had recognized the independence of these Republics, and Spain had withdrawn all claims to the sovereignty of the island.

Mr. WOODWARD further inquired if we extend our protection to these feeble, though independent Governments, do we not initiate aggression with European Powers?

Mr. BANKS—We do not; but we prevent aggression.

Mr. WARD inquired whether there was any precedent for the course contemplated.

Mr. BANKS replied that there was no precedent, but we are in the sea when new action was required. He then stated that owing to the frequent revolutions our commerce had within a few years suffered to the extent of millions of dollars, and within these Republics our trade would be very much increased, and this, if there were no other reasons, was sufficient to make you a good desire peace.

Mr. JUDD asked whether there was any pending negotiation between the Executive and those Governments looking to a protectorate.

Mr. BANKS replied, he was not at liberty to state the fact that there had been, but he could state his own belief, that their Governments and people desired, and would accept, our friendly intervention. More than this he could not say without compromising the Governments. He believed that when we made the proffer it would be accepted.

Mr. GARFIELD remarked, the gentleman from Massachusetts had said we might send a ship-of-war to that island. How could peace and quiet be urged unless the vessel was called on to do something?

Mr. BANKS replied that we would not take possession of the territory, or occupy their seas, without a treaty between those Republics and our own. If the Governments ask for our protection, we can afford it. Our vessels would be accompanied by officers who, if there should be an organization to revolutionize the Government, could advise the insurgents to desist from their purpose, until the time for the election of President occurred in pursuance of law.

Mr. JUDD inquired—Suppose the revolutionists should refuse to accept the advice?

Mr. BANKS—Then it would be for the Government of the United States to determine what right is to be done, and consult the Senate in the shape and form of a treaty.

Mr. BINGHAM asked whether it would not be well to limit the scope of the resolution by adding to the preamble, "if that it was deemed important by recent the President so as not to be hurried in an appropriation of money without first consulting the Congress or the United States and obtaining its consent for further action?" whether we might involve the country in a conflict of arms.

Mr. BANKS replied, we did not intend to enter into a conflict of arms. We want good government, therefore revolutions in this island imperil the peace of our own country. The resolution did not warrant an expenditure of money.

Mr. FENTON did not see how the object could be made effectual by the limited power in the resolution, and he inquired whether the Committee, in defining the power to remove the inhabitants of the island, regarded it as a stepping-stone, having in view eventual annexation of territory.

Mr. BANKS replied, the Committee had no such idea, nor had he any in that direction. There was not time for full deliberation. They gave him authority to report the resolution and sitting more days than one.

Mr. CULLOM said the understanding of the Committee would not justify the gentleman from Massachusetts calling for a vote on the resolution to-day.

Mr. JUDD said they wanted further time.

Mr. BANKS said he would consent that the resolution should go over till to-morrow.

The House at 4 P. M. adjourned.

THE ROGERS MURDER.

NEW AND STARTLING DEVELOPMENTS.

The Assassin Known at Last—The Detectives on His Track—A Wonderful Chapter of Crime.

The murder of CHARLES M. ROGERS in broad daylight upon his own door-stone, by a thwarted thief, was an event of a most startling character, and the history of the pursuit of that thief and assassin ids fair to surpass in interest any criminal story ever told.

To his struggle with the foot-pad Mr. ROGERS owed his death. Had he been content to be despoiled, he would have come out of the encounter with no more serious loss than that of his watch and pocket-book. But he was not so content, and, struggling with his assailant, tore from him the half of the blue flannel sack coat that he wore. In the pocket of that half was a clue that at first baffled the detectives, but finally led, by a devious and perplexing road, to the identity of the murderer. The story of how that clue was followed, and how it led the officers, surely but slowly, out of the labyrinths in which they have been floundering, was the development of yesterday.

Our readers have been fully informed of the nature of that clue. It was nothing more than an ordinary buff envelope, torn at the top, and superscribed "JAMES LOGAN, City; this will be handed by TOM." It was at once placed in the hands of experienced detectives, and a theory was established. JAMES LOGAN had been sent to Sing Sing for burglary, and had been discharged on the 14th of October. He was already an outlaw, and had, it would seem, added murder to his previous offences, for it was plain that he had received a letter from some "pal," had read it, thrown it away or burned it, and unconsciously left the envelope in the pocket of his coat. How this theory was acted on, and how that JAMES LOGAN was hunted down, has been fully told, and it only remains to add that there is now no doubt that while he knew he was wanted by the Police he was utterly unconscious of the reason why. First informed of that reason by the proclamation of Mayor HALL, on Saturday, he at once dumfoundered his pursuers and almost established his innocence by starting Sergeant FEYERBAND with his appearance in the Twentieth Precinct Station-house. That action on his part peremptorily closed the pursuit for the time, and the Fifteenth Precinct Station-house was again the Mecca of notable guardians of the public peace.

Capt. CARPENTER's private office was again the scene of protracted consultations between himself, Mayor HALL, District-Attorney GARVIN, Coroner FLYNN and others. This continued all of Sunday last, and meantime the detectives employed in the case were busily but, as it resulted, aimlessly groping their way among the thieves and outcasts of the City in a vain search for light.

Monday was an important day and brought decisive results. Coroner FLYNN, accompanied by Detectives TULLY and MURPHEY, of the Fifteenth Precinct, was at Sing Sing as a starting point in a new campaign against the daring violator of the law. The discoveries that he made westward will overthrow conjectures, and at last established, it is believed conclusively, the identity of the murderer. To fully put this startling phase of the matter before the public, a brief retrospect is necessary.

Four or five years ago a gang of young outlaws infested the Seventh Ward, and of bold and frequent were the outrages which they committed that they finally became noted as the "Nineteenth-street gang." The JAMES LOGAN who surrendered himself on Saturday was one of them, and his most intimate associate among them was a youth of about his own age and almost his counterpart in personal appearance. In height, build, color of hair and eyes and complexion the two were exactly similar. So much one has often been mistaken for the other by those not intimately acquainted with both. LOGAN was at last "put away"—as the Police call it—and went to Sing Sing for a burglary at the corner of Twenty-second-street and Seventh-avenue. His "pal," was caught less than a year before on a similar crime, and he too was sentenced to a term in the State Prison. Thus it happened that the two associates in crime, intimate before their incarceration, became reunited and renewed their intimacy in the prison. Time at last separated them for LOGAN served his term and, as stated, he was liberated on the 14th of October last.

Now comes the discoveries made on Monday last by Coroner FLYNN and Detective TULLY. About four weeks ago the "pal" desired to communicate with LOGAN and and wrote him a letter superscribed "JAMES LOGAN, City. This will be handed you by TOM." This it could have been meant only by the initiated, for the writer, for the "pal" did not know by whom he was to send it. Convict-like he essayed to evade the regular channel of communication with the outside world—through the prison Chaplain—and managed to get down to the river where a sloop was lying, with the intention of giving the letter to some one of the hands to carry it to its destination. But when he glided to the deck of the sloop he looked about him and his breath came thick and fast. Not a person official was in sight—not a human being had seen him approach the river. Thus far he was a free man. He peered down into the cabin to see was there. He rummaged the little vessel and found himself the only thing of life on board. Then came a sudden resolution—he secreted himself in the hold. During the night the sloop sailed, and unknown to all of the hands, brought to the great City the man who was to startle a vast community by the enormity of his crime. The "pal" became the bearer of his own letter to JAMES LOGAN, and as a sequence of fate, the murderer of CHARLES M. ROGERS. The letter he never delivered, for he spoke to LOGAN by word of mouth, and therefore he tore up the letter, but in a moment of forgetfulness thrust the evidence into the pocket of his coat, thus connecting him indissolubly with his crime.

The "pal" was an escaped convict, an outlaw among outlaws. Thieves were afraid to harbor him, and old associates shrunk from him; for such as he are generally soon run down, and being restored to prison, the acts of those who befriended them are known to the authorities. Thus it was hard to look for one at some future time. True the "pal" had the sympathy of the "Nineteenth-street gang," but that was unsubstantial and he was desperate. Thus it happened that in the gray dawn of the 31st day of December he was passing with his tatter and less courageous companion, against the daring violator of the law. The discoveries that he made westward will overthrow the horrible story has been fully told, with one single exception. The assassins thought, and the public have believed, that their act was unseen by any human eye except that of their victim; but the tireless industry of Capt. CARPENTER yesterday discovered that there had been one reputable and intelligent witness of the whole affair. It was the appearance of this man that so frightened the "pal" that he fled precipitately the moment after the stabbing and did not carry to pick up his hat, the sheath of his knife or the fragment of his coat. His companion fled with him, the murderer as he ran putting on the raiment which fortune had provided for him. This discovered witness cannot only minutely describe the murder, but the person and countenance of the murderer are stamped indelibly upon his mind by the savagery of the deed he witnessed. Why he did not voluntarily come forward to give the authorities the benefit of his knowledge has been satisfactorily explained by his being a convicted imprisoned and witness; and while his name is, for the present, withheld, he will be forthcoming at the proper time.

Thus far we have related facts discovered on Monday and yesterday, and the proofs of which are already in the hands of the authorities. We could go further, and give the name and history of the "pal" who became his own letter bearer, and who is the murderer, but for the fact that publicity would enable him to break through the living wall of detectives which is rapidly and surely closing in around him. On the right scent at last, the officers are giving redoubled effort to the pursuit, and are confident of an early success. Detective Irvine, of the Central Police Office, has been added to the pursuers, and his intimate knowledge of the person of the hunted man, and his ability and long experience as a detective will be of invaluable assistance to the overworked Capt. CARPENTER and his subordinates, Sergeants LOWERY and Officers TULLY, MURPHEY, BARKER, GILLAN and others. Last night the authorities were almost certain of the whereabouts of the murderer, but as detective business nothing is done until all is accomplished, and it is not proper at this moment to give publicity to the precise progress of the pursuit. It can be said, however, that all of those engaged in the chase were confident of its early and successful termination. For the present the passive accomplice has been forgotten, and all endeavors are bent to the capture of the "pal" who came from Sing Sing in the hold of a sloop, the bearer of his own letter, which he never delivered, and the murderer of Mr. ROGERS.

All we have thus far narrated was yesterday under the surface, known to but few, and not even suspected by many. Some even of those engaged in the pursuit had no knowledge of the truth, but were doing their work in obedience to the directions of Mayor HALL, District-Attorney GARVIN or Capt. CARPENTER, were indeed assisting in the chase, but only unknowingly. This fact led yesterday to another apparent complication, in the arrest of a second JAMES LOGAN, by Officers EKANES and TRUNDY, acting under the direction of Capt. ALLAIRE of the Twenty-first Precinct. This JAMES LOGAN is described as one of the "Romans" of the Twenty-first Ward, and appears to have been wanted for some time, but it is not entirely clear that Capt. ALLAIRE was not working independently of all other parties. However that may be, this LOGAN was arrested at an early hour of the morning, just after he left a house on the corner of Forty-ninth-street and Third-avenue. Subsequently the same officers arrested his brother, MICHAEL LOGAN, in Twenty-ninth-street, and both prisoners were taken before Coroner FLYNN, at No. 4 Centre-street. There the prisoners, JAMES, was confronted with the negro boy, and the hat fit not and the hat were tried upon him, but for what reason did not appear any more than that the hat was not identified. The boy was asked if he knew the hat was not identified. The boy was asked if he knew the hat was not identified. The boy was asked if he knew
